Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many parliamentary constituencies there are in (a) England, (b) Wales, (c) Northern Ireland and (d) Scotland.

Mrs. Rumbold: The number of parliamentary constituencies is currently as follows:

England 523; Wales 38; Scotland 72 and Northern Ireland 17.

The number of constituencies in England will be increased to 524 at the next general election.

NATIONAL FINANCE

National Expenditure

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total expenditure by central and local government in the last financial year; what is the estimated figure for the current year; and by how much income tax requires to be raised to yield the equivalent sums.

Mr. Mellor: The latest information on expenditure by central and local government was published in the "Statistical Supplement to the 1990 Autumn Statement" —Cm 1520. The figures requested, consistent with the supplement, are as follows:—

	1989-90	1990-91
Central government[1]
Expenditure other than debt interest	127,521	141,214
Debt interest	17,823	[2]17,800
Total	145,344	[2]159,000
Local authorities[3]
Expenditure other than debt interest	47,970	52,086
Debt interest	4,919	[2]5,200
Total	52,889	[2]57,300

[1] Including the financing requirements of public corporations (other than nationalised industries).
[2] Rounded to the nearest £100 million.
[3] Includes expenditure financed by support provided by central government (eg revenue support grant) and expenditure which local authorities finance for themselves (eg from community charge, capital receipts).

A ready reckoner for the revenue effects of tax changes was published table 4.5 of the autumn statement.

Departmental Purchasing

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many Departments to date have established or expanded purchasing units purchasing goods formerly bought on their behalf by the Crown Suppliers; and what are the total annual running costs of those units;

(2) how many Departments to date have established units purchasing services formerly provided to them by the Property Services Agency; and what are the total annual running costs of those units.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Stolen Equipment

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a list of the equipment stolen from his Department in the last three years for which information is available; and what was the approximate value of each item.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The following items of equipment are noted as having been stolen from Her Majesty's Treasury in the last three years:
seven transponders, 1987—value £1,400.
computer accessories and document box, 1987—value £2,126·91.
Video recorder, 1988—value £285·89.
electroholm screen, 1988—value £292·35.
ICL keyboard, 1990—value £126.

Endangered Species

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many prosecutions were entered as a result of articles relating to rare and endangered species seized by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise in the year to 31 March 1990.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 8 February 1991]: During the year in question four prosecutions, involving five persons, were instituted under the Customs and Excise Management Act 1979, for attempted evasion of the endangered species restrictions. All related to live creatures or plants, rather than to articles derived from them.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, further to his answer of 1 February, Official Report, column 678, if he will give details of the 1,546 live animals and birds seized by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise in the year to 31 March 1990; and what is Her Majesty's Government's policy in respect of the disposal of such creatures.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 8 February 1991]: The total of 1,546 live animals and birds was made up of the following categories:

Category	Number seized
Monkeys	8
Wild feline	1
Snakes	171
Tortoises	48
Turtles	90
Lizards	571
Frogs	40
Toads	50
Salamanders	12
Parrots	22
Other birds	533

As to disposal of such creatures, I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him on 21 July 1990 at column 417. Policy in this area remains unchanged.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Latin America

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what new policies Her Majesty's Government are proposing for the improvement of co-operation with the democratic Latin American Governments in their efforts to (a) consolidate democracy, (b) restore or improve freedoms, (c) promote social justice and (d) gain better access to the EC markets.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We take every opportunity to strengthen our excellent relations with Latin American countries, encourage respect for democratic freedoms and human rights and foster trade and investment. In allocating development aid, we increasingly apply the good government criteria outlined by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in his speech to the Overseas Development Institute on 6 June 1990. We are also working for an early and successful conclusion of the GATT round.

Hong Kong

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what arrangements he has made to safeguard the position after 1999 of Catholics in Hong Kong who do not join the Patriotic Chinese Church; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Sino-British joint declaration on the future of Hong Kong, the Basic Law for the Hong Kong special administrative region and the international covenant on civil and political rights, which will continue to apply to Hong Kong after 1997, all make provision for the continuation of freedom of religious belief and practice in Hong Kong after 1997.

Ex-prisoners of War

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have received from British ex-prisoners of war about their treatment while working for I.G. Farben during the second world war.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We have received a number of representations. Some cases of mistreatment by individuals were investigated after the War with a view to war crimes proceedings, but, as a general matter, we do not consider that treatment of prisoners of war who worked for I.G. Farben can be shown to have been contrary to the 1929 Geneva convention. There is no basis to raise this matter with the German authorities.

China

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of the People's Republic of China regarding the imprisonment of Catholics at Baoding and Yixian in Hebei province.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are seeking details of the specific cases referred to by the hon. Member. We have raised our concerns over the treatment of Catholics in China on a number of occasions. Together with our European partners, we made representations about the imprisonment of Catholics in China in February 1990. My hon. Friend the then Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, also raised this with the Chinese Government during his visit to Peking in July.

Third Geneva Convention

Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if there are any conditions under which a signatory to the third Geneva convention may be permitted to refuse to observe any or all of its obligations under that convention.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. The third Geneva convention does not have a provision for derogation and is binding on all its parties, which include Iraq.

The Gulf

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussion he has had with the Government of Jordan about bombing of the Iraq-Jordan highway.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have received reports from the Jordanian Government of bombing incidents on the highway in late January.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government with regard to that part of United Nations Security Council resolution 678 referring to the restoration of international peace and security as being applicable to a wider area than that covered by Arab Gulf states.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave him on 30 January at column 525. Security Council resolution 678 is concerned with the illegal Iraqi invasion and occupation of Kuwait and measures taken to restore international peace and security in that area.

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what approach he has received from the Iranian Government about their peace plans for the Gulf; and what response he has sent.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Iranian Government are reported to have put forward to Iraq certain suggestions for achieving a peaceful solution to the current crisis. The details have not been disclosed, but we would support any proposal based on a complete Iraqi withdrawal from Kuwait and full compliance with the relevant Security Council resolutions.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on surveys conducted by the United Nations, or any international body of which the United Kingdom is a member, into the efficacy of sanctions against Iraq up to 16 January.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 17 December to the hon. Member for Bolton, South-East (Mr. Young), at column 71. The UN has not published any survey on the efficacy of sanctions against Iraq up to 16 January. We are not aware of any such survey published by other international organisations to which we belong.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to propose the permanent sitting of the United Nations during the Gulf war so that all peace proposals can be examined on the international stage.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: As required under article 28 of the charter, the UN Security Council is so organised as to enable it to function continuously.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what communications he has received from the United Nations Secretary-General about bombing of vehicles on the main Iraq-Jordan highway; and what response he has made.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have received no communications from the UN Secretary-General on this subject.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on statements made by or reports issued from United Nations senior officials or its offices, as to the level of casualties, military and/or civilian, in Iraq and Kuwait.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no information on casualty levels in Iraq or Kuwait from United Nations sources. The Amnesty International report published in December describes conditions and civilian casualties in Kuwait under Iraqi occupation.

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will take action to place the costs of the Gulf war to individual members of the European Community to joint European account in relation to the dependence of individual Community members on Gulf oil.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No.

AEA Fuel Services

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Newport, West on 21 January 1991 at column 50, if the United Kingdomn embassy in Oslo promoted any services offered by the United Kingdom AEA Fuel Services.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: UKAEA Dounreay has sought and received from the British embassy in Oslo advice on marketing services relating to offshore oil installations, but the embassy has not been engaged in the promotion of its services.

Israel

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Israel about the curfew imposed upon Palestinians in the west bank, Gaza and east Jerusalem; and what replies he has received.

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what immediate action he intends to ensure that Israel removes the curfew currently imposed on the Palestinians of the west bank and Gaza strip.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Twelve have agreed to make an early demarche to the Israeli authorities to press for an easing of the curfew. Meanwhile, we understand that the Israelis are taking steps to ease the curfew.

Phnom Penh

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which (a) Ministers and (b) officials from his Department visited Phnom Penh between 1981 and 1990 inclusive; and if he will give the dates of the visits in each case.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: No Foreign and Commonwealth Minister visited Phnom Penh between 1981 and 1990. Officials from the British embassy in Bangkok and the ODA have twice visited Phnom Penh from 8 to 16 December 1989 and from 31 August to 6 September 1990.

Stolen Equipment

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a list of the equipment stolen from his Department in the last three years for which information is available; and what was the approximate value of each item.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The following items of equipment have been reported stolen from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office in the past three years:

Two desk fans	20·00	40·00
Two answer phones	60·83	121·66
Two telephones from lifts	7·00	14·00
One tape recorder	—	47·50
Two office cleaning machines	250·00	500·00
Total	—	723·16

Ambassadors

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish the number of Her Majesty's ambassadors currently in post who do not come from the ranks of career diplomats; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: There are currently no ambassadors or high commissioners who are other than career members of Her Majesty's diplomatic service.

Beirut

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made this year concerning the Christian community in Beirut.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have frequently urged the Lebanese Government to pursue a policy of peace and reconciliation. Further bloodshed will only cause more suffering.

Middle East

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he intends to take through the United Nations to ensure that any long-term plans to make the middle east a region free from weapons of mass destruction would apply to Israel in the same way as they would to Arab countries.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Any middle east zone free from weapons of mass destruction would by definition have to include Israel as well as Arab states. President Mubarak proposed such a zone in 1990. We understand that the Egyptians are considering how to take their initiative forward. We would look carefully at any further proposals. In the meantime, we shall continue to pursue controls on nuclear and other sensitive technologies through the respective international fora.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

The Gulf

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to introduce a know-how programme for middle east states, similar to that available to Poland and other central and eastern European states, following the conclusion of hostilities in the Gulf war.

Mrs. Chalker: The Government already have technical co-operation programmes under the overseas aid programme providing know how to a number of middle east states.

Ethiopia

Mr. Aitken: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will specify the nature of the economic co-operation with Ethiopia which the Minister for Overseas Development discussed in Addis Ababa with President Mengistu last month.

Mrs. Chalker: I had discussions with Ethiopian Ministers about their economic reform programme. I urged them to reach full agreement with the International Monetary Fund and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, since this will be necessary in order to attract additional flows of development aid from the international community. I drew attention to the fact that the United Kingdom makes its contribution to Ethiopia's development through our participation in the European Community's development programme.

Commonwealth Development Corporation

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any plans to increase the funding of the Commonwealth Development Corporation during 1991.

Mrs. Chalker: No final decision has yet been taken on the level of funding of the Commonwealth Development Corporation for 1991-92.

Third World Debt

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs at which conferences dealing with third world debt reduction he was represented during 1989 and 1990.

Mrs. Chalker: The Secretary of State attended the Houston economic summit in 1990. Sir Geoffrey Howe as Secretary of State attended the Paris economic summit in 1989. The permanent secretary of the Overseas Development Administration was a member of the Chancellor of the Exchequer's delegation for the 1989 and 1990 annual meeting of the International Monetary Fund and World bank, and the six-monthly meetings of their interim and development committees. He also attended the Commonwealth Finance Ministers meetings in Jamaica in 1989 and in Trinidad in 1990, where Britain launched new proposals on reducing the official debt of the poorest countries. I have attended a number of international gatherings at which debt has been discussed, including the United Nations special session on economic recovery and development in April 1990.

Bilateral Aid

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the average level of per capita aid to (a) former British colonies and (b) other nations.

Mrs. Chalker: The average level of British bilateral aid per capita to former British colonies in 1989 was £0·50 and to other developing countries £0·09.

African Refugees

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance his Department intends to provide for African refugees during 1991.

Mrs. Chalker: The aid programme is managed in a way that allows us to respond quickly to refugee needs as they arise.

Foreign Aid

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the total level of British overseas aid in each of the past five years at constant prices.

Mrs. Chalker: The level of total United Kingdom gross public expenditure on aid in each of the last five years at constant prices was:

Year	£,000 Constant 1989 prices
1985	1,641,558
1986	1,616,168
1987	1,476,461
1988	1,780,848
1989	1,787,863

TRANSPORT

European Community (Representations)

11. Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport in what areas there have been joint approaches by his Department and Irish Government officials to the European Community on transport matters.

Mr. Rifkind: There have been no such approaches, but I and my Department keep in close contact with Irish colleagues on all matters of common transport interest.

Anglo-Scottish Air Services

12. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to transfer any of the existing Anglo-Scottish air services which operate in and out of Heathrow to any other airport in the south-east of England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. and learned Friend has no such plans.

Vehicle Emissions

13. Mrs. Irene Adams: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the Government's plans to reduce vehicle emissions.

Mr. Chope: From the end of 1992, all new cars will have to comply with strict new Community standards to control their emissions. We also intend to introduce an emissions check in the MOT test later this year.

The Government are also seeking to persuade the Community to adopt the strict US 1994 standards for emissions from trucks and buses.

A38

14. Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to conclude his investigations into the future status of the A38 between Exeter and Plymouth.

Mr. Chope: Consultants have still to be appointed for the assessment of the needs of the A38 between Exeter and Plymouth which was announced in "Roads for Prosperity".

The assessment is likely to take about 12 months. Once it is complete, further consideration can be given to the need for and form of any improvement scheme.

Waterloo Station (Suburban Services)

15. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent opportunities he has taken to travel officially on Network SouthEast's suburban commuter lines services into or from Waterloo station.

Mr. Freeman: I recently travelled with my hon. Friend on Network SouthEast services into Waterloo to see at first hand travelling conditions and to identify problems that commuters experience on these lines.

Air Traffic

16. Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority to discuss the air traffic distribution rules.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. and learned Friend met the chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority on 4 February; the air traffic distribution rules were not discussed.

Second Severn Crossing

17. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he is proposing to visit the site for the second Severn crossing.

Mr. Freeman: I have already visited the site proposed for the English landfall of the bridge.

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the recent meeting between his officials, representatives of Laing GMT, and English Stones Fishery Partnership regarding compensation for disturbance of fishing rights concomitant upon the construction of the second Severn crossing.

Mr. Freeman: A meeting has been held with the English Stones Fishery Partnership concerning the possible effects of the proposed second Severn bridge on the partnership's fishing rights. The partnership has now deposited a petition against the Severn Bridges Bill. It will now be for the Select Committee to consider that petition in the normal way.

Channel Tunnel

18. Mr. Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the total investment by British Rail in improved rail services which will be in place for the proposed opening of the channel tunnel.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail plans to invest £1·4 billion to enable international passenger and freight services to begin when the tunnel opens. However, as my right hon. and learned Friend told my hon. Friend the Member for Hexham (Mr. Amos) on 5 December, at column 121, it is unlikely that the trains for the daytime north of London through passenger services will be ready until 1994.

Airport Security

19. Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on his discussions on the current level of security at British airports.

Mr. McLoughlin: There is nothing I can add to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Stretford (Mr. Lloyd) on 29 January at column 446.

Docklands Light Railway

20. Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has for the future ownership of the docklands light railway; and if he has given any direction to London Regional Transport in respect of its disposal.

Mr. Freeman: We have no plans to change the ownership of the docklands light railway and no direction has been given to London Regional Transport in respect of its disposal.

Train Doors

21. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many young people have been injured or killed in accidents caused by falling from the doors of moving trains for each of the last five years.

Mr. McLoughlin: There have been some 270 casualties in accidents involving people falling from trains in the last five years, including provisional figures for 1990. Her Majesty's railway inspectorate does not keep separate records of accidents involving young people.

Greater Manchester Relief Road

22. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to release the details he has received of a proposed alternative route for the Greater Manchester northern and western relief road.

Mr. Chope: This route is still at the initial stages of assessment. If it proves to be a viable proposition, details will be released when public consultation takes place. I cannot say yet when that will be.

British Rail (Disabled Access)

23. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he proposes to discuss station access for the disabled when he next meets the chairman of British Rail.

Mr. Freeman: The decision whether to improve access to stations lies with British Rail. It is for BR to design and plan improvements with the help of its disability adviser, and to judge any proposals against other schemes and the resources available.

Freight Services

24. Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has received any proposals from British Rail about additional investment in freight services.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail's 1990 plan includes some £900 million investment in freight over the period 1990-91 to 1994-95. Since last spring, we have given approval for BR to invest over £120 million in new wagons and locomotives and the electrification of the line from Tonbridge to Redhill. There are currently no outstanding investment cases for rail freight investment with the Department.

Scottish Rail Links (Electrification)

25. Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals his Department has received from ScotRail for the electrification of rail links within Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: My Department has received no such proposals from the British Railways Board. I understand that ScotRail is considering a number of possibilities.

M66

26. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with North West Water about the cost of the M66 motorway over Audenshaw reservoir No. 3; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: A number of discussions have been held with North West Water, because construction of the M66 motorway will reduce the storage capacity of Audenshaw reservoir No. 3. A new pipeline from the Goyt valley is to be provided as a replacement facility. The reasonable costs of providing the pipeline will be met by the Department.

Roadworks (Compensation)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to bring forward proposals to compensate small businesses affected by roadworks.

Mr. Chope: No. The legislation governing compulsory purchase and compensation is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment. Compensation is already payable at full market value of property acquired. In addition, there are payments for disturbance, and for depreciation when premises are harmed by the effects of a road scheme.

School Buses (Seat Belts)

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to introduce legislation for the compulsory use of seat belts in school buses.

Mr. Chope: We shall consider the question of mandatory wearing seat belts in school buses once there is a requirement for seat belts to be fitted. We are not free to introduce such a requirement nationally, but are pressing the EC to bring forward proposals to enable us to do so.

Motor Cyclists (Training Certificates)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether certificates for motor cyclists who have completed basic training are currently available for issue at the approved Berwick, Belford and Alnwick centres; whether he has any plans to discontinue training at Alnwick; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: I will write to the hon. Member.

Civil Aviation Authority

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next expects to meet the chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. and learned Friend meets the chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority from time to time to discuss matters of mutual interest.

Historic Counties

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate the cost to his Department of erecting boundary signs on main roads designating the boundaries of historic counties which are no longer effective.

Mr. Chope: I regret that information on the numbers of main roads crossing the borders of historic counties and on the size and design of possible boundary signs could be assembled only at disproportionate cost.

Railway Safety

Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has received British Rail's safety plan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: The British Railways Board has submitted its safety plan to me today. I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Library.

I welcome the board's plan, which sets out the board's safety policy and objectives and the wide range of initiatives that are already under way. These include new safety management systems, improved training, investment in new equipment and changes in working methods. The plan is a comprehensive and forward-looking document. It demonstrates the high level of commitment and of resources being devoted, throughout British Rail, to running a safe railway. I hope that the plan will increase public awareness of this enormous effort, and reassure rail users.

Railway accidents are rare and rail remains one of the safest modes of transport. Building on this, the board is committed to maintaining and improving this enviable safety record.

The initiatives in the plan will be taken into account in BR's estimates of future safety expenditure. We have endorsed in full both BR's expenditure of £70 million on additional safety measures in 1990-91, and its planned expenditure of some £330 million over the next three years. BR knows that there is no financial constraint on necessary and cost-effective safety expenditure.

I have written to Dr. Cullen, the chairman of the Health and Safety Commission, seeking the commission's view on the safety plan.

A2 Roadworks

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish in the Official Report the cost of all roadworks undertaken on that stretch of the A2 roadway between Falconwood cemetery, Eltham and Pepper Hill, Swanscombe, from November 1984 to date; if he will adjust costs to reflect current prices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The cost of major roadworks undertaken since the beginning of November 1984 on the A2 between Falconwood cemetery, Eltham and Pepper Hill, Swanscombe, adjusted to reflect current prices and including the accepted tender prices for works at present in hand in the London borough of Bexley and Kent, is £16·1 million approximately. This figure comprises £10·9 million for major maintenance and, in Kent, £5·2 million for hard shoulder provision forming part of the A2 London boundary-M2 improvement scheme.

Ports

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will (a) give full details of Government grants to ports and (b) name the ports which received them in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. McLoughlin: Port modernisaton grants under section 12 of the Harbours Act 1964 were discontinued in 1971, and this provision was repealed by the Transport Act 1981. The Port of London (Financial Assistance) Act 1980 provided for grants to enable the Port of London Authority to reduce its labour force and restore the profitability of its undertaking. That Act was replaced by the Ports (Financial Assistance) Act 1981 which applied also to the Mersey Docks and Harbour Company. From 3 July 1989, these grants have been superseded by Government contributions under the dock work compensation payment scheme. Amounts granted over the 10-year period were as follows:

£ million

	PLA	MDHC
1980-81	23·5	—
1981-82	21·8	25·8
1982-83	31·8	56·3
1983-84	35·4	40·5
1984-85	24·4	9·4
1985-86	55·7	9·5
1986-87	20·7	4·5
1987-88	6·8	8·6
1988-89	1·5	2·9
1989-90	—	—

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will (a) name those ports which have received loans under the Harbour Loans Act 1972 or subsequent legislation, (b) give full details of those loans and (c) list which of those loans (i) have been repaid in full (ii) have been written off and (iii) are outstanding.

Mr. McLoughlin: Information is not readily available on loans that were paid off several years ago. The three last outstanding loans under the 1972 Act, made to the Clyde port authority in 1984 and 1985 and totalling £3·293 million, were paid off in 1989. Loans were also made under the Ports (Financial Assistance) Act 1981 as follows:

	Year	£ million
Port of London Authority	1982	[1]3·0
	1983	[1]1·9
Mersey Docks and Harbour Company	1982	[2]4·13

[1] Balance outstanding.
[2] £1·5 million written off May 1989; balance paid off.

A69

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the road junctions on the A69 between Newcastle and Carlisle which are being considered for safety improvement measures.

Mr. Chope: Two schemes are included in the 1991-92 regional programme. They are the Bush Bends to Haydon Bridge improvement, Northumberland and Corby cross-roads improvement, Cumbria.

Fishing Vessels

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any proposals to amend the rules and regulations governing the occupational safety of the crews of United Kingdom-registered fishing vessels.

Mr. McLoughlin: Consultation recently began with the industry on ways of extending United Kingdom occupational safety provisions for fishermen in line with those for people in other occupations and with forthcoming European Community requirements.

Heathrow Airport

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to carry out the recommendations of the Civil Aviation Authority regarding greater access to Heathrow airport.

Mr. Rifkind: I am considering the authority's advice and hope to announce a decision before long.

M40

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what effect the recent opening of the M40 motorway extension has had on traffic flow on the M1 motorway.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 7 February 1991]: So far the available figures show that traffic flows on the M1 have been reduced by between 4,000 and 11,000 vehicles per week day. But these are initial counts only.

WALES

Thyroid Cancer

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many cases of thyroid cancer have been recorded in Wales in each of the last five years; and how many deaths.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The latest available information for usual residents of Wales—all ages, male and female—is as follows:

Registrations of newly diagnosed cases of thyroid cancer[1]

Health Promotion Authority

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the budget of the Health Promotion Authority for Wales in 1991, 1992 and 1993.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Subject to parliamentary approval, in 1991-92 a total of £2·472 million will be made available for the authority's core allocation and a further £340,000 will be allocated for new projects. An additional £28,000 will be available as a further earmarked reserve to meet the cost of the authority's contribution to the family planning information service. The allocation will be conditional upon satisfactory completion of annual performance review. It represents a further and substantial commitment of resources to the authority. Allocations for 1992-93 and 1993-94 have not yet been decided.

Housing

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library a copy of the speech made on 1 February by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Wales on the subject of housing.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: I made no speech about housing on 1 February.

Secure Accommodation (Juveniles)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much money has been spent by local authorities in Wales on (a) secure accommodation within Wales and (b) secure accommodation outside Wales for alleged juvenile offenders on remand in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The information requested is not held centrally.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much he estimates local authorities in Wales will need to spend (a) in terms of capital and (b) in terms of annual revenue expenditure to meet the requirements for secure accommodation for the remand of alleged juvenile offenders as a result of the Government's proposals of 4 February.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The general implications of the proposals for Welsh authorities are being taken into account in our review of secure care and we shall be consulting local authorities on this matter.

Stolen Equipment

Mr. Menzies Campbell To ask the Secretary of State or Wales if he will publish a list of the equipment stolen from his Department in the last three years for which information is available; and what was the approximate value of each item.

Mr. David Hunt: Details of equipment stolen from the Department during the last three financial years are set out in the tables.

Health Service

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what moneys have been allocated to district health authorities in Wales under the waiting times initiative to tackle problematic waiting lists referred to in objective 45 of the Welsh Office NHS directorate agenda for action; and what is the estimated cost of implementing the proposals for service improvement, in objectives 45 to 54;

(2) what action he has taken to ensure a greater concern and sensitivity to consumers' needs referred to in objectives 46, 53, 54, in the Welsh Office NHS directorate agenda for action; and what is the budgeted cost for 1991 and 1992 of objectives 32 to 35, outlining the need for a more integrated information system within each district;

(3) if he will give details of the outcome of his Office's objective of developing a pricing policy for Welsh health common services authorities to cover overheads and allow for development of consultancy expertise as cited in objective 38 of the Welsh Office NHS directorate agenda for action; and what is the budgeted cost for 1991 and 1992;

(4) which devised business action plans for each of the Welsh health common services authorities referred to in objective 37, page 52, of the Welsh Office NHS directorate agenda for action have been identified to make best use of staff and technical resources; and what are the annual budgets in 1991 and 1992 for each of the Welsh health common services authorities referred to;

(5) if he will give the estimated cost, in 1990-91 and 1991-92, of implementing the proposals for rationalising the supplies and stores objectives listed in the Welsh Office NHS directorate agenda for action; and what are the estimated costs, by area health authority in Wales in 1991 and 1992, of objectives 41, 42, 43 and 44, on schemes for health promotion;

(6) what will be the cost of (a) the establishment of an all-Wales telecommunications network referred to in objective 34 and (b) implementing objectives 36 to 40, listed in pages 52 and 53 of the Welsh Office NHS directorate agenda for action, outlining various schemes for general management modifications.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: I will write to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what budget has been allocated in 1991-92 to those agencies in Wales charged with developing an appropriate and consistent approach to health promotion and health promotion targets, referred to in objectives 41, 43 and 44 of the Welsh Office national health service directorate agenda for action.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: In respect of the Health Promotion Authority for Wales I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him earlier today. In respect of district health authorities I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply my right hon. Friend gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Cardiff, North (Mr. Jones) on 30 January 1991, at columns 515-17.

The 1991-92 administration revenue allocations for family health services authorities will be announced as soon as possible.

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the budgeted cost of the establishment of goal setting machinery for promotion and prevention, referred to in objective 42 of the Welsh Office national health service directorate agenda for action in 1990-91.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The information requested is not available centrally.

Homelessness

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the average length of stay for families with dependent children, who were accepted as homeless by their local authority and placed in bed and breakfast accommodation, in 1990 or at the nearest available date; and if he will express the answer in terms of the average length of stay for Wales and for each local authority.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The information is not centrally available.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many families with dependent children were accepted as homeless in 1990 or at the nearest available date.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: A total of 4,850 households with dependent children were accepted as homeless during the financial year 1989-90.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many families with dependent children, accepted as homeless by their local authorities, were placed in bed and breakfast accommodation in 1990 or at the nearest available date; and if he will expand the answer in terms of the total number for Wales and the number for each local authority.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The information requested is given for the financial year 1989-90 in the table:

NHS Land and Property

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the latest estimated revenues, by district health authority, for sale of NHS land and property in 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett [holding answer 7 February 1991]: Taking into account historical performance and delivering receipts within forecast, the latest estimate of receipts from the sale of surplus NHS land and property in Wales for 1990-91 and 1991-92 is £5 million and £7 million respectively. A reliable estimate by individual DHA is not possible given the unertainties associated with the disposal of property.

Higher Education

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will make it his policy to provide transitional funding before 1 April 1992 to higher education courses at five Welsh higher education colleges so as to provide for direct funding for those courses threatened with closure in the academic year 1991-92.

Sir Wyn Roberts [holding answer 8 February 1991]: The local authority higher education institutions will receive their funding from within local authority provision for 1991-92—in the main through the higher education quantum. We have accepted the advice received from the Wales Advisory Body for Local Authority Higher Education on the programmes to be funded from the HE quantum in 1991-92.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Books and Equipment

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the 10 local education authorities with the lowest expenditure per pupil on books and equipment; and what is the average local authority expenditure on books and equipment.

Mr. Fallon: The table lists the 10 local education authorities with the lowest expenditure per pupil on books and equipment in 1988-89, the latest year for which information is available. Average local authority expenditure on books and equipment in 1988-89 was £54 per pupil.

1. The figures are based on LEA returns to DOE and pupil number returns to DES.
2. The figures cover spending on books and equipment in nursery, primary and secondary schools.

Kent Education Department

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the total revenue budget for Kent county council education department for 1990-91.

Mr. Fallon: The 1990-91 education budget for Kent local education authority is estimated at £432·3 million. This estimate is based on Kent county council's 1990-91 budget return to the Department of the Environment submitted in May 1990 and is on a similar basis to the education component of its 1990-91 standard spending assessment.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was (a) the bid and (b) the capital allocation to Kent county council education department for 1989-90.

Mr. Fallon: For 1989-90, Kent county council submitted a bid for an education capital allocation of £24·492 million and was given an allocation of £8·610 million.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the standard spending assessment for Kent county council education department for 1990-91.

Mr. Fallon: The education component of Kent county council's 1990-91 standard spending assessment is £456·6 million.

Education Statistics, Leeds

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much money was spent on primary and secondary schools in Leeds in 1979 and in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Fallon: The available data are as follows:

(£000's)

Leeds	1979-80	1988-89
Nursery and primary	27,835	56,652
Secondary	35,929	83,135

Notes to table:
1. The figures are taken from Leeds' expenditure returns to DOE and cover net institutional expenditure. They include the costs of salaries and wages, premises and certain supplies and services. They do not include the cost of school meals, central administration, debt charges or revenue contributions to capital outlay.
2. All figures quoted are in cash terms.

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the secondary school population in Leeds in 1979 and in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Fallon: The information requested for Leeds local education authority is as follows:

	Pupils in maintained secondary schools[1]
January 1979	73,747
January 1990	50,777

[1] Includes middle schools deemed secondary.

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much money in real terms was spent on average on each child attending state primary and secondary schools in Leeds in 1979 and in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Fallon: Leeds spent £480 per nursery and primary pupil in 1979-80 and £1,155 in 1988-89, the latest year for which figures are available. It spent £490 per secondary pupil in 1979-80 and £1,545 in 1988-89. At 1988-89 prices those figures are £905 and £1,155 respectively for nursery and primary schools, and £920 and £1,545 respectively for secondary schools.

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much Leeds education authority spent on books and equipment per pupil in 1987-88 and 1988-89; what is the estimated expenditure for 1990-91; and what is the comparable average expenditure for metropolitan districts over the same period.

Mr. Fallon: Leeds spent £19 per pupil on books and equipment in 1987-88 and £22 per pupil in 1988-89. The comparable average figures for metropolitan districts are £41 per pupil in 1987-88 on books and equipment and £48 in 1988-89. Estimated figures for 1990-91 are not available.

Pupil:Teacher Ratios

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the pupil:teacher ratio in (a) primary and (b) secondary schools in Leeds in 1979 and in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Fallon: The information requested for Leeds local education authority is as follows:

	Pupil: teacher ratio
	Primary	Secondary
January 1979	24·6	17·8
January 1990	19·4	14·8

Iraqi Students

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will indicate the income derived from postgraduate courses of study by Iraqi students in each year from 1981 to 1990 inclusive; and what proportion of these amounts were provided from grants or loans from the Government of Iraq.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Fees for overseas students are set by institutions. They are expected to meet the full cost of the provision made, but details of the actual fees charged are not collected by the Department. However, on the basis of the minimum fee levels recommended by institutions' representative bodies for different types of courses, the Department's estimate is that the total fee income from the numbers of Iraqi postgraduate students in British institutions in the 10 academic years 1980-81 to 1989-90 —details of which were provided at column 372 on 14 January in response to an earlier question from the hon. Member—was in the region of £35 million to £40 million. The Department does not collect information about the sources of individual students' funding.

Licensed Teachers

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the annual cost per trainee teacher of the licensed teacher scheme, disaggregated into (i) payment to licensee, (ii) payment to mentor teacher and (iii) additional expenditure incurred in paying for other teachers to cover mentors' usual teaching commitments.

Mr. Fallon: The information is not available in the form requested. Licensed teachers are employed by local education authorities and school governing bodies and are paid in accordance with the teachers' pay and conditions document 1990.

Training and associated costs for licensed teachers, including payment of incentive allowances to mentor teachers and the provision of supply cover both for the licensee and mentor, are eligible for support under the grants for education support and training programme.

A table showing the amount of local education authority expenditure to be supported in the 1990-91 and 1991-92 financial years and the number of licensed teachers expected to be supported has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what monitoring he is undertaking of the costs and effectiveness of the licensed teacher scheme; how many local authorities are operating the scheme; and how many teachers are involved.

Mr. Fallon: We have commissioned the National Foundation for Educational Research to evaluate the scope, organisation and effectiveness of the first two years of the licensed teacher route to qualified teacher status. In addition to its routine inspections, Her Majesty's inspectorate is conducting a three-term examination of the licensed teacher programmes being operated by 11 local education authorities. In 1990-91, 57 LEAs applied under the local education authority training grants scheme and were allocated £2·3 million to support the training of 500 licensed teachers. For 1991-92, 67 LEAs have been allocated £5·4 million to support 1,500 licensed teachers under the grant for education support and training programme. A condition of receiving funding under this programme is that authorities monitor and evaluate the effectiveness of their training schemes for licensed teachers.

Oxbridge Undergraduates

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish in the Official Report the number of undergraduates who enter Oxford and Cambridge university colleges who came from local authority-maintained schools; and if he will show the numbers as a proportion of the entry as a whole for each college for each of the last five years.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Information on individual institutions is collected by the "Universities Statistical Record". Apart from regularly published information, further data at the institutional level may be released only with the prior authorisation of the institution.

Stolen Equipment

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a list of the equipment stolen from his Department in the last three years for which information is available; and what was the approximate value of each item.

Mr. Eggar: The equipment stolen from the Department over the last three years is as follows:

1	Portable typewriter	208·00
7	Dictating Machines at £68 each	476·00
1	Calculator	51·00
1	Pocket Calculator	9·00
1	Pocket memo dictating machine	74·00
1	Camera (taken from the site of Nottingham CTC)	290·00
1	Video recorder	245·00
1	Long play video recorder	334·00

Assisted Place Pupils

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish in the Official Report the number of assisted place pupils who have entered higher and continuing education and the number who have entered Oxford and Cambridge colleges; and if he will show such figures for each full year as available.

Mr. Fallon: The numbers of APS pupils entering universities, polytechnics and other establishments of further and higher education is available for academic years 1988-89 onward and are shown in the table. Information is not collected on the particular institutions which pupils enter.

Destination of Assisted Pupil leavers

Academic Year	Numbers of assisted pupils[1]

[2] Subject to confirmation.

Nuclear Structure Facility, Daresbury

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will allocate to the Science and Engineering Research Council £20 million earmarked for funding for the nuclear structure facility at Daresbury;

(2) if he will give the allocated budgets for 1991-92, 1992-93 and 1993-94 for the synchrotron radiation source project and the nuclear structure facility at the Daresbury laboratory of the Science and Engineering Research Council in Cheshire.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. and learned Friend allocates the science budget to the Science and Engineering Research Council and other bodies in the light of advice from the Advisory Board for the Research Councils. It is for the research councils to determine the detailed allocation of the funds made available to them.

Shire Counties (Expenditure)

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list all shire counties in England in rank order of expenditure (a) per secondary pupil and (b) per primary pupil (i) including all items included in the general schools budget except capital and (ii) as in (i) but also excluding school meals and home-to-school transport for the latest year for which he has information.

Mr. Fallon: The information requested is not yet available.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Church of England (Vacancies)

37. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners, what is the average period of vacancy for (i) bishoprics and (ii) incumbencies in the Church of England.

Mr. Alison: Over the last five years the average period of vacancy for diocesan bishops has been 22 weeks and for incumbents 29 weeks.

DEFENCE

Atomic Weapons Establishment Bill

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has now made of the costs anticipated for 1991-92, 1992-93, 1993-94 and 1994-95 to fund the proposals by the Atomic Weapons Establishment Bill, since his statement to the House of 18 December 1990, Official Report, column 251.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The only expenditure I expect to arise directly from the provisions of the Atomic Weapons Establishment Bill, as opposed to expenditure which the Secretary of State is able to make under his existing powers, is that of setting up an employing company at AWE. As I told the House on 18 December, this is likely to be of the order of £50,000. This will probably be incurred during 1991-92.

The Gulf

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what expressions of concern he has received from service men and their families about the length of time that mail takes to arrive in the Gulf and about the non-arrival of some mail; and what respons he proposes to make.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We have received a number of letters from service families expressing concern about the length of time it takes for mail to arrive in the Gulf, but these must be set against the very large volume of mail being delivered daily to our forces.

All forces mail to the Gulf is being moved by RAF aircraft. The transit time for letters is around five days and ten days for parcels, though these timings may be exceeded for troops in forward positions.

The importance of an efficient mail service is fully appreciated by the Services and every effort is made to achieve the earliest possible delivery.

Foreign Service Personnel (Training)

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what income was derived from foreign and Commonwealth personnel sent for training at United Kingdom service establishments in each of the years 1985 to 1990 inclusive; and what amounts were paid in each year by the Government of Iraq.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The income from training foreign and commonwealth personnel at United Kingdom service establishments in the financial years 1985-86 to 1989-90 is set out below. It is not our practice to release details of military training provided for individual countries—details of payments by Iraq are not held centrally and would require disproportionate effort to collect.

Financial Year	£ million
1985-86	25·0
1986-87	47·9
1987-88	41·2
1988-89	50·2
1989-90	51·7

Stolen Equipment

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish a list of the equipment stolen from his Department in the last three years for which information is available; and what was the approximate value of each item.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The number and value of major cases of theft of assets reported in the three most recent years for which information is available were provided in the Comptroller and Auditor General's Report on Fraud and Irregularities at Defence Establishments HC 134 (14 January 1991) at Table 1.

Three of the cases are covered in greater detail in cases 4, 5 and 6 of appendix 1 to that report, and the other two cases were:

£22,761—Controlled and prescription only drugs.

£19,707—Equipment.

Details of the individual items of equipment included in these major cases and in minor theft cases, which are handled at unit/establishment level, cannot be provided without disproportionate effort.

Land Acquisition

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all land acquisitions by his Department in Scotland in the last 10 years, giving the dates of the acquisitions, the area acquired, and whether each acquisition is in the form of (a) freehold, (b) leasehold and (c) training rights.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces will write to the hon. Member.

Anti-tank Device

Mr. Dover: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the third tranche of orders for the anti-tank device will be placed with Royal Ordnance plc.

Mr. Alan Clark: Manufacturing release for the third tranche of the light anti-armour weapon 80 (LAW 80) is under consideration. I hope to make a decision shortly.

The Gulf

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what units are currently on standby for the Gulf.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has announced the deployment to the Gulf of a further half squadron of RAF Buccaneer aircraft. Any additional deployments will be announced as appropriate when they arise.

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether any plans for rotating units in the Gulf could result in United Kingdom forces being replaced by forces from other Community countries;

(2) what plans he has for rotating units currently serving in the Gulf.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The roulement of units in the Gulf will, if necessary, be considered as part of the normal military planning process, but is unlikely to involve the replacement of British units by forces from other European Community countries.

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what factors, if any, compromise the minimisation of allied casualties as the overriding priority in considering how and at what time the plans for the liberation of Kuwait should be put into effect.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The aim of the current allied air campaign is to reduce the ability and the will of the Iraqi forces to fight, so that allied ground forces can, if necessary, complete the liberation of Kuwait in the shortest possible time with the fewest casualties.

Defence Jobs

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the consequence in Wales for jobs in defence establishments following the decision to reduce in real terms defence spending.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State indicated to the House on 21 January at column 103, we are continuing to study the broad proposals stemming from the options for change study. We will keep the House informed of progress in our planning as the implications for individual establishments become clearer.

HMS Onyx and Brereton

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he proposes to pay off (a) HMS Onyx and (b) HMS Brereton; when he announced each such decision; what further vessels he intends to announce the decommissioning of in the current financial year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: HMS Onyx was decommissioned in December 1990. HMS Brereton is to be decommissioned in April 1991. It is not our normal practice to announce formally the decommissioning of individual vessels. Other ships which are to be decommissioned in the current financial year are HMS Penelope, HMS Hubberston, HMS Cuxton, HMS Cormorant and HMS Hart.

Holy Loch

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 5 February, Official Report, column 167, under what circumstances he envisages visits to the Holy loch by United States naval vessels carrying cruise missiles after the base has been closed.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are no specific plans for future visits to the Holy loch by United States vessels after the submarine forward support facility has closed. However, the Holy loch is currently one of a number of berths around the United Kingdom approved for visits by nuclear powered submarines. Holy loch's use for future periodic visits is therefore possible.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Non-fossil Fuel Obligation

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 24 January, Official Report, column 280, what plans he has to extend the non-fossil fuel obligation provisions of the Electricity Act 1989 to Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: There are no plans to extend the non-fossil fuel obligation provisions of the Electricity Act to Northern Ireland. However, in drawing up proposals for electricity privatisation in Northern Ireland, I am considering legislative provisions to encourage the use of renewable energy sources. I expect to publish the proposals shortly.

General Grant Factor

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the general grant factor in pence per pound for each district council for 1980-81 and each subsequent year.

Mr. Needham: The information is not recorded in the form requested.

Leisure Facilities

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the income from recreation and leisure facilities for each district council for the last available year and state the number of such facilities in respect of each council.

Mr. Needham: The income from recreation and leisure facilities for the 1989-90 year is set out below. Information about the number of facilities in respect of each council is not held centrally.

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many district councils sought, and how many received, Government loan sanction to build leisure facilities where a Department of Education grant was unavailable; and if he will list the councils and the schemes.

Mr. Needham: The information is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Regional Rates

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the regional rate in Northern Ireland for each year since 1980-81.

Dr. Mawhinney: The regional rate in Northern Ireland for each year since 1980-81 is set out in the table:

Year	Regional rate (non-domestic) (pence)
1980-81	71·7
1981-82	78·7
1982-83	84·1
1983-84	86·54
1984-85	93·34
1985-86	100·87
1986-87	110·38
1987-88	113·53
1988-89	122·59
1989-90	138·07
1990-91	148·27

Domestic ratepayers have received a reduction of 12 pence in the poundage each year, through the domestic rate aid grant. The resulting domestic regional rate poundages were:

Year	Regional rate (domestic) (pence)
1980-81	59·70
1981-82	66·70
1982-83	72·10
1983-84	74·54
1984-85	81·34
1985-86	88·87
1986-87	98·38
1987-88	101·53
1988-89	110·59
1989-90	126·07
1990-91	136·27

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the percentage increase in Northern Ireland's regional rate for each year since 1980-81; and what was the annual rate of inflation for each year.

Dr. Mawhinney: The percentage increase in Northern Ireland's regional rate and the annual rate of inflation in April for each year since 1980-81 is set out below.

Year	Per cent. increase (non-domestic)	Per cent. increase (domestic)	Per cent. annual rate of inflation
1980-81	17·9	22·3	21·8
1981-82	9·8	11·7	12·0
1982-83	6·9	8·1	9·4
1983-84	2·9	3·4	4·0
1984-85	7·9	9·1	5·2
1985-86	8·1	9·3	6·8
1986-87	9·4	10·7	3·0
1987-88	2·9	3·2	4·4
1988-89	7·98	8·92	3·9

Year	Per cent. increase (non-domestic)	Per cent. increase (domestic)	Per cent. Annual rate of inflation

1990-91	7·39	8·09	9·4

District Councils

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the penny product for each Northern Ireland district council's district rate.

Mr. Needham: The information is set out in the table:

Penny rate products for each Northern Ireland district council 1990-91 year

Housing, Belfast

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what number and percentage of houses in each housing district in Belfast were declared unfit for human habitation in each of the years between 1979 and 1991.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive but I have been advised by the chief executive that the information is not readily available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many houses have been built by (a) the Northern Ireland Housing Executive and (b) housing associations in each housing district in Belfast over the period from 1979 to 1991.

Mr. Needham: (a) This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive but I have been advised by the chief executive that the information sought for the period 1979-80—1981-82 is not readily available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. For the period 1982-83—1990-91 the numbers of dwellings built are as follows:

Belfast Housing Districts

Year	1	2	3	4	5	6	7
1982-83	118	486	217	215	109	209	390

General Grant Factor

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the general grant factor paid to each district council in Northern Ireland in 1990-91 and the amount that would have been paid if the 1980-81 general grant factor had been used.

Mr. Needham: The total estimated amount of general grant due to each district council in 1990-91 is set out in the table:

Estimated grant payable in 1990-91 year

Council	£
Antrim	271,500
Ards	1,246,451
Armagh	981,329
Ballymena	485,881
Ballymoney	560,834
Banbridge	594,700
Belfast	5,490,717
Carrickfergus	472,571
Castlereagh	373,483
Coleraine	296,053
Cookstown	589,420
Craigavon	1,607,153
Derry	3,700,423
Down	1,514,200
Dungannon	987,085
Fermanagh	1,105,293
Larne	440,627
Limavady	660,561
Lisburn	1,063,829
Magherafelt	710,623
Moyle	480,442
Newry and Mourne	2,594,300
Newtownabbey	914,170
North Down	678,434
Omagh	1,182,481
Strabane	1,259,828

It is not possible to apply the 1980-81 general grant factor to district council expenditure in 1990-91. The calculation of the general grant factor is dependent on the population, rateable valuations and the penny rate product for a district in a particular year. The criteria applying in 1980-81 are not comparable with those applying in 1990-91.

Spelling

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will postpone the implementation of proposals to penalise pupils who have difficulty with spelling in examinations; and what provision is being made to prevent disadvantaging dyslexic children when penalties for poor spelling are introduced at examination level.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Northern Ireland Schools Examinations and Assessment Council (NISEAC) is required by law to seek to ensure that its examinations are recognised as equivalent in standard to those conducted elsewhere in the United Kingdom. As part of the process of achieving this its GCSE syllabuses conform to the nationally set general and subject criteria for GCSE and, if there is any change to those criteria, this would affect NISEAC examinations also. The possible introduction of a penalty for poor spelling is currently being considered by the joint council for the GCSE and final decisions have not yet been taken.

On the matter of the position of dyslexic children, for reasons of equivalence of standards it will be necessary to conform to whatever arrangements are agreed in relation to the spelling penalty for these pupils, and others with learning difficulties, in England and Wales.

Hazardous Waste, Maydown

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the consideration given by the Industrial Development Board to funding a hazardous waste incinerator at Dupont's Maydown complex; what discussions have taken place with Dupont on the subject of grant aid; what figures are being indicated; and what discussions have taken place between the Department of Economic Development and the Industrial Development Board on such grant aid.

Mr. Needham: The Industrial Development Board has not yet given detailed consideration to financial support for a high temperature waste incinerator at Maydown. Du Pont is still at a very early stage in considering the feasibility of constructing such a facility.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether any Northern Ireland Government Minister, Department or public agency communicated with any public official of the Irish Republic regarding Dupont's interest in hazardous waste incineration at its Maydown plant prior to receipt of a letter from the appropriate Minister in the Republic of Ireland in November 1990.

Mr. Needham: No.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Gulf Crisis

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will take steps to establish the nations from which supplies relating to the extension of Scud missiles, the manufacture of chemical and biological weapons and the preparation of nuclear weapons, in Iraq were provided; if he will make a statement setting out the information he currently has on the subject; and if he will further indicate which supplies were in breach of international or EC trade restrictions.

Mr. Sainsbury: There are a variety of agreements to which most EC countries subscribe. We are not in a position to say where such supplies were obtained.

Accountancy Monitoring

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make it his policy before awarding the supervisory status created for accountancy and auditing under the Companies Act 1989 to any accountancy body, to inquire whether the reports of the monitoring unit are accessible to members of the public.

Mr. Redwood: I understand that the reports will not be available to the public.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will make it his policy prior to making any decision on conferring supervisory status to any accountancy body to inquire whether all firms permitted to carry out audits are bonded.

Mr. Redwood: The Secretary of State will recognise an applicant for recognition only if, among other things, it has adequate rules or arrangements designed to ensure that its company auditing members take such steps as may reasonably be expected of them to secure that they are able to meet claims against them arising out of company audit work.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) whether any of the applicants for the supervisory status created for accountancy and auditing by the Companies Act 1989 have informed him of their intentions to consult the public for their arrangements on auditor monitoring;

(2) whether he will make it his policy to request applicants for the supervisory status in the accountancy and auditing regime created by the Companies Act 1989 to consult the public on the rules for auditor independence.

Mr. Redwood: The applicants have assured me that they are ready to make details of the applications available on request. I welcome this and will take into account any representations I receive from the public in considering the applications.

Software Directive

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if the Common position on the software directive adopted by the Council of Ministers allows vendors to engage in limited reverse analysis of a program for the purpose of developing a new program which competes with the program being analysed;

(2) if he will make it his policy to seek modifications to the EC draft software directive to add a limited derogation for maintenance purposes;

(3) in what circumstances the compilation of software into a form which is readable by human beings will be permitted under the European software directive.

Mr. Leigh: The Council of Ministers adopted a common position on the EC directive on the legal protection of computer programs in December and modification of its terms can be made only if the European Parliament proposes amendments. The directive does not provide a general exception to copyright to allow the reproduction or translation of a program in any form or to allow its analysis for the purpose of maintenance or for producing a new product. There will, however, be cases where such activities will fall within the scope of exceptions in articles 5 or 6. These provisions allow error correction, analysis of a program during running and decompilation of a program for the purpose of achieving interoperability of an independently created program with another program, subject to certain conditions.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what consideration he has given to the impact that a vendor monopoly on the service of computer programs would have on independent systems integrators and maintenance firms;

(2) what consideration he has given to the costs that a monopoly to conduct program maintenance would impose on computer users in terms of high prices, service and product choice.

Mr. Leigh: The aim of the EC software directive is to afford protection to computer programs as their development requires the investment of substantial resources. Some exceptions to protection are, however, permitted and these will allow certain maintenance activities. In any event, those supplying maintenance services to the users of computer systems are subject to both national and Community competition law relating to abuse of monopolies and restrictive practices.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to ensure that the views of users of information technology concerning the EC software directive are represented to the European Commission.

Mr. Leigh: My Department sought the views of all interested parties, including users, throughout the negotiations on the EC software directive and all these views were taken into account in determining the United Kingdom attitude to the proposals. User groups also made their views known to the EC Commission.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) whether acts characterised as United Kingdom local custom and usage in the computer industry and undertaken to maintain computer programs will be permitted by the EC directive on software copyright;

(2) whether acts characterised as United Kingdom local custom and usage in the computer industry and undertaken to engage in reverse analysis of computer programs to develop non-infringing programs will be permitted under the EC directive on software copyright.

Mr. Leigh: The directive will require member states to give copyright protection to computer programs as literary works. This is already the case in the United Kingdom. When the directive is implemented, the protection afforded will be very similar to that already existing here, so the legality, or otherwise, of the activities referred to as "local custom and usage" will not change to any significant degree.

Securities and Investments Board

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the status and accountability of the Securities and Investments Board.

Mr. Redwood: The Securities and Investments Board is the designated agency to which certain functions have been transferred under section 114 of the Financial Services Act 1986. Section 117 of the Act requires the SIB to report at least once in each year to the Secretary of State on the discharge of those functions and requires the Secretary of State to lay copies of the reports before Parliament.

Money Laundering

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many cases of money laundering were brought to his attention in each year since 1985 by either (1) the public, (2) his inspectors, (3) the Official Receiver, (4) the Serious Fraud Office, (5) agencies created under the Financial Services Act and (6) other professional or regulatory agencies.

Mr. Redwood: This information is not available in the form requested.

Company Asset Figures

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will make a statement of the uses his Department makes of the company asset figures included in his Department's annual report on companies under table E1.

Mr. Redwood: The figures show how information on company accounts held at Companies House can be used in producing aggregate financial data. Thes figures are aimed primarily at providing general information for outside readership, rather than for the Department's own use. More detailed figures which are extracted from these sources are published which can be used in the analysis of industrial and commercial sectors by both Government and outside bodies.

Binder Hamlyn

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether any of his inspectors appointed since 1979 have been partners in Binder Hamlyn.

Mr. Redwood: Yes. Three partners in BDO Binder Hamlyn have been appointed inspectors since 1979.

Auditors

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he is considering proposing legislation to require the auditors' terms in office for banks and insurance companies to be rotated every five years; and what representations he has so far received on this matter from accountants or bodies linked to the accountancy profession.

Mr. Redwood: We have no plans for such legislation. Responses to two recent consultation exercises were overwhelmingly against requiring companies to change auditors at regular intervals on the grounds that it would increase costs and make audits less effective as each new set of auditors would have to start from scratch in building up knowledge about the client which is essential if the audit is to be effective.

Levitt Group

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many communications he has received from the receivers on the affairs of the Levitt Group; and how many meetings have been held between his Department and the receivers on the affairs of the Levitt Group.

Mr. Redwood: My Department is in contact with the liquidators as and when the need arises.

Telecommunications

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress he has made in his discussions with the Director General of Telecommunications to ensure that premium rate services are provided only following an opt-in decision by the subscriber, communicated in writing.

Mr. Redwood: The regulation of premium rate telephone services is primarily, a matter for the Director General of Telecommunications, Sir Bryan Carsberg. He has welcomed British Telecom's recent introduction of optional call-barring to premium rate services, as recommended by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission in its report on chatlines and message services published in January 1989.

British Telecom are able to make the facility available to customers on digital exchanges. It will become more widely available as more exchanges are digitalised.

Companies House

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will give a breakdown of the manner in which the 1989-90 surplus of the Companies House executive agency has been disbursed.

Mr. Redwood: Companies House's operating surplus funds the wider costs of running the system of regulating companies and developing company law. In 1989-90 the relevant costs were investigations division (including external inspections) £10·5 million, companies division £1·6 million and the solicitors' office £0·5 million.

Overseas British Companies

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he intends to propose legislation to require British companies operating overseas to reveal information about the constraints on the remittance of overseas cash and other assets.

Mr. Redwood: Issues of this sort are better dealt with through accounting standards than in the law. I understand that this is one of the points which the Accounting Standards Board will be considering as it develops its work on accounting standards, taking into account the difficulties as well as the benefits which might flow from such a requirement.

Export Credits

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list by country the total sums involved in claims covered by signed bilateral rescheduling agreements with Export Credits Guarantee Department as at 31 March 1989 and 31 March 1990.

Mr. Leigh: It is not the practice of this or previous Governments to disclose the amounts of debt rescheduled bilaterally by the Export Credits Guarantee Department on a country-by-country basis.

Figures for ECGD's debt restructuring on a regional basis are as follows:

Iraq (Exports)

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the total sum provided or arranged under the export credit schemes to assist United Kingdom exports to Iraq in each of the last five years.

Mr. Leigh: I refer to the answer my hon. Friend the Minister for Trade gave to the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) on 17 October 1990, Official Report, column 837.

Wool

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the report of a joint DTI/HM Customs investigation into wool fibre deficiencies in wool imported from the Prato region of Italy is to be published; for how long the investigation was conducted; how many samples were tested; what action he proposes taking following the investigation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 7 February 1991]: The results of the investigation into certain wool imports have so far been inconclusive. We are now exploring the possibility of a further exercise on a wider basis.

Carpets

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action he has taken to improve surveillance of labelling by overseas carpet manufacturers, following a recent survey by the West Yorkshire Trading Standards Authority which was reported to him; how many sample tests of carpets have been carried out by his Department in each of the past five years to check whether fibre content conforms to label descriptions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 7 February 1991]: My Department has not conducted any testing exercise in respect of the fibre content of carpets.

Company Liquidations

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list by local authority area the number of company liquidations for the first six months of the financial years 1989-90 and 1990-91 and the percentage change between these two figures.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 8 February 1991]: This information could not be provided without disproportionate cost.

EMPLOYMENT

Employment Training

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will state the occupancy levels of employment training in terms of (a) actual numbers and (b) target numbers by (i) training and enterprise council area and (ii) standard occupational classification.

Mr. Jackson: It is estimated that there are currently about 197,000 people on employment training; this figure cannot be broken down as requested. Targets for those in training and by standard occupational classification are not available.

Noise at Work

Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many prohibition notices were issued against employers in 1989-90 relating to the control of noise at work for each of the geographical areas of, respectively, the factory inspectorate, the mines and quarries inspectorate, the agricultural inspectorate and the railways inspectorate.

Mr. Forth: The following prohibition notices were issued by the factory inspectorate[1] during the period 1989-90.

	Number
London South West	1
South Yorkshire and Humberside	1
East Midlands	1

[1] No prohibition notices were issued for noise related offences by HSE's agricultural inspectorate, and mines and quarries inspectorates or by the railways inspectorates during the period 1989-90.

Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many improvement notices were issued against employers in 1989-90 relating to control of noise at work for each of the geographical areas of, respectively, the factory inspectorate, the mines and quarries inspectorate, the agricultural inspectorate and the railways inspectorate.

Mr. Forth: The following improvement notices were issued during the period 1989-90.

[1] No improvement notices were issued for noise related offences by Health and Safety Executive's mines inspectorate and railway inspectorate during the period 1989-90.

Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many prosecutions were taken against employers in 1989-90 relating to the control of noise at work for each of the geographical areas of, respectively, the factory inspectorate, the mines and quarries inspectorate, the agricultural inspectorate and railways inspectorate; and what were the penalties in each case.

Mr. Forth: One information was laid in the period 1989-90 in respect of noise-related offences: This was taken by the factory inspectorate[1] in the west and north Yorkshire area. It resulted in a conviction with a fine of £1,800.

[1] No proceedings were instituted for noise related offences by the Health and Safety Executive's agricultural inspectorate, and mines and quarries inspectorate, or by the railway inspectorate during the period 1989-90.

Labour Statistics, Kent

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what was the level of unemployment for each parliamentary constituency in Kent in (a) June 1990 and (b) November 1990;

(2) for each parliamentary constituency in Kent, what was the level of unemployment in (a) June 1990 and (b) November 1990, calculated on the same basis as that which was used to make such calculations by his Department in April 1979;

(3) what was the level of unemployment in April 1979, for each parliamentary constituency in Kent.

Mr. Jackson: Unemployment data for parliamentary constituencies is only available from July 1983. The available information is obtainable from the NOMIS database in the House of Commons Library. It is not possible to estimate the number of people who would now be registered as unemployed according to the basis prevailing in 1979. At that time people had to register at jobcentres or careers offices as well as unemployment benefit offices in order to qualify for benefits. These procedures no longer exist.

Hazardous Substances

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many companies and how many individuals were prosecuted under the Contol of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations, between 1 October 1989 and 31 December 1990; how many and what percentage of those prosecutions were successful; and what penalties were imposed on those found guilty of such offences.

Mr. Forth: Provisional figures for the first year of operation of the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations—1 October 1989 to 30 September 1990—show a total of 29 informations laid under the regulations by HSE's factory and agricultural inspectorates. These resulted in 28 convictions—97 per cent.—with an average fine of £604 imposed. All these proceedings were taken against employers. No prosecutions were taken under the COSHH regulations against individuals as employees or self-employed persons.

Self-employed People

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the percentage of self-employed people in the work forces of member states of the EC.

Mr. Jackson: The information is shown in the table.

Self employed as a percentage of the civilian workforce

	1988 (mid year) percentage
Belgium	12·8
Denmark	8·3
Federal Republic of Germany	[1]8·8
France	13·8

[1] Figures are for 1986, latest available.

[2] The latest available figure (September 1990) is 11·9 per cent.

Labour Statistics

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish a table showing the number of unemployed people in the Paisley, South constituency for each September between 1979 until 1990.

Mr. Jackson: Unemployment figures for parliamentary constituencies have only been available since June 1983. The following information is available in the Library. The table shows the number of unemployed claimants in the Paisley, South parliamentary constituency in each September for the years 1983 to 1990.

The number of unemployed claimants in the Paisley South parliamentary constituency in September of each year (not seasonally adjusted)

Year	Number
1984	5,854
1985	5,710
1986	5,596
1987	5,228
1988	4,317
1989	3,147
1990	2,785

Direct comparisons are affected by the changes in the coverage of the count that have occurred over the period.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish a table in ranked order showing the total rises in unemployment over the past 12 months in the 50 worst affected parliamentary constituencies.

Mr. Jackson: The information is available on the NOMIS database in the House of Commons Library.

Training, Merseyside

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will make a statement on the future of training schemes provided by the Merseyside Council for Voluntary Service;

(2) by how many places the allocation of adult training places on the Merseyside Council for Voluntary Service scheme have been reduced; and what provision he will now make for the training of the category of trainees previously assisted by the Merseyside Council for Voluntary Service;

(3) by how much the total number of training places, available through employment training, has been cut in the Merseyside area;

(4) if he will visit the Merseyside Council for Voluntary Service scheme.

Mr. Jackson: I am writing to the hon. Gentleman.

Ford Motor Company

Mr. Aspinwall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether his Department has monitored the success of the employee development and assistance programme operated by Ford Motor Company in Britain; and whether he has plans to encourage other major companies to launch similar schemes.

Mr. Jackson: My Department is following closely the progress of the Ford employee development and assistance programme which supports a wide range of opportunities for the personal development of the company's employees. I welcome any company initiatives that will assist in developing the skills and competencies of individual employees.

Stolen Equipment

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish a list of the equipment stolen from his Department in the last three years for which information is available; and what was the approximate value of each item.

Mr. Jackson: Equipment stolen and written off in the Department's annual accounts over the past three years for which information is available is as follows:

1988-89		1989-90		1990-91 (to date)

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will provide, for each quarter since September 1989, the number of decisions concerning (i) refusal of employment, (ii) actively seeking work, (iii) restricted availability and (iv) neglect to avail oneself of employment, in which the time between receiving the referral and the adjudication officer's decision was (a) up to seven days, (b) eight to 14 days, (c) 15 to 21 days, (d) 22 to 28 days and (e) over 28 days, as recorded by the 5 per cent. sample of adjudication officer decisions;

(2) under what circumstances the disqualification, disallowance or suspension of a claim for unemployment benefit and/or income support results in a person's removal from the unemployment register;

(3) if he will make a statement on the progress that has been made on introducing the new framework and active signing in each region of the Employment Service and the impact of the changes on the implementation of the Social Security Act 1989.

Mr. Jackson: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service executive agency are the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred these questions for reply.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list all reports completed and the expected dates of publication of future Government reports on the operation of the "actively seeking employment" procedures.

Mr. Jackson: No reports on the operation of the "actively seeking employment" procedures have been completed. It is not possible to provide dates of publication for future Government reports concerning these procedures, as these will depend on the nature of the work commissioned and the time taken to complete any research.

HEALTH

Medicine Inspectors

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the cost per hour of employing a medicines inspector; and what is the charge per hour to those requiring an inspection for a wholesale dealers licence.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Current pay scales for medicines inspectors are £16,822 to £22,138 and £21,905 to £27,299 for a principal medicines inspector. In addition there are overheads including superannuation, national insurance, accommodation, training, travel and subsistence and support services. These costs cannot be allocated to the different grade of inspector or, until the current unit cost evaluation and fee review is completed, to the type of inspection undertaken. Fees for inspections are at a standard rate and not charged at an hourly rate.

Medicines Control Agency

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many inspections have been undertaken by the Medicines Control Agency in each of the last three years.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information requested is shown in the table:

	Number
1987-1988[1]	867
1988-1989	900
1989-1990	891

[1](April 1—March 31)

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the present cost of a wholesale dealers licence from the Medicines Control Agency; and whether any additional charges are involved in applying for and obtaining such a licence.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: An application for a wholesale dealers licence costs £1,105. An inspection is usually necessary in order to determine the application for pharmacy and prescription-only medicines wholesalers, for which there is an additional fee of £1,105.

Breast Care Nurses

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions he has had with the Royal College of Nursing concerning the setting of standards for breast care nurses; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Standards of nursing care are a matter for the profession. Representatives from the NHS breast screening programme, in partnership with the Royal College of Nursing, are in the advanced stages of determining standards for nurses working in the programme's assessment centres. General standards for breast care nurses are being drawn up with the breast care nurses forum at the Royal College of Nursing.

Haemophiliacs

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many haemophiliacs who require Factor VIII injections are given the new highly purified material from

Armour Pharmaceuticals; how many are given the older material from Bio Products; and if he will provide a breakdown for each regional health authority.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not held centrally.

Pain Relief

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what information he has regarding the number of national health service hospitals that have a pain management team for cancer patients; and if every nationl health service hospital treating cancer patients has a pain relief consultant;

(2) what information he has regarding the number of national health service hospitals with a specific person responsible for pain relief post-operatively;

(3) if he will estimate the national health service personnel, time and funds available to relieve post-operative pain;

(4) how many national health service hospitals have a policy for managing post-operative pain;

(5) what information he has regarding the number of national health service in-patient beds allocated for pain relief investigation and management; and by what percentage the figure has changed in the last five years;

(6) if he will list the pain relief facilities possessed by each national health service region, including comprehensive pain clinics and hospices;

(7) what studies have been carried out by his Department of American pain management programmes; how many such programmes there are in national health service hospitals; and what information he has regarding the cost effectiveness of such programmes;

(8) what information he has regarding the number of hours per week devoted to the relief of chronic pain in national health service hospitals;

(9) what information he has on the number of national health service in-patient beds allocated for pain relief investigation and management;

(10) if he will request national health service regions, when allocating funds to district health authorities, to require them to identify resources being used for pain relief;

(11) what guidance he has given to the national health service regions regarding provision for pain relief; if he monitors such provision; and what additional funding he has provided for it.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information about numbers of beds, financial and staffing resources allocated to the investigation and management of pain including post-operative pain is not held centrally. All medical and nursing staff will wish to relieve pain experienced by their patients. It is for health authorities acting upon the advice of clinicians to determine the level of pain relief services they consider necessary to meet the needs of their populations and make suitable arrangements for such provision. In doing so, they will wish to take into account the report of the joint working party on pain after surgery published by the Royal College of Surgeons and College of Anaesthetists in September 1990, a copy of which is available in the Library. Study of American pain management programmes and evaluation and adoption of that or any other pain management programme is first for the medical profession.

Hospices

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has regarding access for cancer patients to hospices; and if he will list the towns that have hospices and the towns with populations over 100,000 that do not have one.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The available evidence suggests that the majority of people admitted to hospices have cancer. It is for health authorities to ensure that terminally ill people and their families have access to a comprehensive range of health services. Information on hospice provision is not available in the form requested, but I understand that the St. Christopher's hospice information service regularly publishes a directory of hospice services.

London Ambulance Services

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if, pursuant to his answer of 28 January, Official Report, column 425, which person or body authorised the reduced standard of response time applicable to ambulances in Greater London; what consultations he had and with which bodies or persons concerning the adoption of this standard; and on what date it will be adopted.

Mr. Dorrell: As indicated in my reply to the hon. Member on 21 January, at column 75, the management executive advised health authorities of the adjusted recommended response times. Consultations took place with representatives of regional general managers and regional ambulance officers. It is for individual ambulance authorities to decide whether to adopt the recommended standards.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the number of (a) emergency and (b) non-emergency ambulance vehicles allocated to each of the ambulance stations of the London ambulance service, or held in servicing or reserve, as at 31 December 1990; and where such statistics are publicly available;

(2) what is the number of (a) trainee ambulance personnel and (b) qualified ambulance personnel in the employ of the London ambulance service at the latest convenient date; and how many with para-medical qualifications receive gross salaries of £13,000 per annum or more;

(3) if he will list the names of any ambulance stations of the emergency service of the London ambulance service which were unmanned for any period in the month of January, together with the total period and number of occasions of any such occurrence;

(4) what was the number of emergency ambulances of the London ambulance service manned and on duty for each of the shifts on each day of the week 7 to 13 January.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is not held centrally. The management of the London ambulance service is the responsibility of the London ambulance service board. The hon. Member may wish to write to Mr. James Harris, the chairman of board, for details.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number of (a) emergency and (b) non-emergency ambulance vehicles in the ownership of the London ambulance service; what was the number of vehicles constructed in each category in each year since 1981; and where such information is publicly available.

Mr. Dorrell: The table shows the number of emergency and non-emergency vehicles in the ownership of the London ambulance service. Data are not collected centrally on the number of vehicles constructed/commissioned in each category. The management of the London ambulance service is the responsibility of the London ambulance service board. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. James Harris, the chairman, for details.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the percentage of emergency calls received by the London ambulance service which showed response times within a period of 14 minutes for each day of December 1990.

Mr. Dorrell: Data are only available centrally on a financial year basis. In 1989-90 the London ambulance service responded to 78·8 per cent. of emergency calls within 14 minutes. The management of the London ambulance service is the responsibility of the London ambulance service board. The hon. Member may wish to write to Mr. James Harris, the chairman, for details.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what inflation factor was applied to the funding of the London ambulance service between each of the financial years 1979-80 and 1989-90; and on what basis each was calculated.

Mr. Dorrell: For the years 1979-80 to 1989-90 the Department used the resource allocation working party formula—RAWP—to allocate resources to regions. The allocation included an element for service development and inflation as measured by the gross domestic product deflator. The South West Thames regional health authority has overall responsibility for the London ambulance service. The hon. Member may wish to write to Baroness Cumberlege, the chairman of South West Thames regional health authority, for details.

Smoked Salmon

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish notices in the press explaining the present legal position with regard to the posting of smoked salmon.

Mr. Dorrell: An advertising campaign to raise awareness on the new temperature controls generally is planned for the end of February.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make a statement on the provisions which apply to the posting of smoked salmon (a) in England to European destinations and (b) from points in Europe to destinations in England;

(2) what steps he intends to take to intercept smoked salmon being sent into this country by post from Europe.

Mr. Dorrell: The Food Hygiene (Amendment) Regulations 1990 apply to food businesses in England and Wales. Foods specified in the regulations posted to destinations in Europe are covered by the regulations while in England and Wales. Relevant foods posted in Europe to England and Wales would similarly need to comply with the regulations. Securing compliance with the regulations is a matter for local enforcement agencies.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will delay the implementation of the Food Hygiene (Amendment) Regulations 1990 as they affect smoked salmon, until the results of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food research at Torry are known.

Mr. Dorrell: We shall be considering the Torry research very shortly.

Romanian Babies

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has about Romanian babies being brought into the United Kingdom and subsequently returned to Romania by adults not wishing to pursue adoption procedures.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We are not aware of any case where this has happened. Adoption law provides that Romanian children are given the same protection as any other child who is subject to adoption proceedings.

Stolen Equipment

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish a list of the equipment stolen from his Department in the last three years for which information is available; and what was the approximate value of each item.

Mr. Dorrell: The tables show the official equipment that has been stolen from the Department of Health's London headquarters buildings only, together with its approximate value. The buildings are also occupied by the Department of Social Security's London headquarters staff and the lists include equipment stolen from both Departments' London headquarters. The information for the financial year 1988-89 is not comprehensive, as records were not kept in all buildings at that time.

South East Thames RHA

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish in the Official Report a list of major and minor capital projects undertaken or initiated in each district health authority in the South East Thames regional health authority area since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: According to information held centrally, 40 capital projects each costing more than £1 million have been started since 1 January 1980. These are set out in the table. Information on smaller schemes is not held centrally.

We are building the health service not just for today, but for the next century, so the Government attach the highest priority to improving and modernising health buildings on which about £1 billion will be spent in England this year. Some 470 schemes each costing over £1 million are at various stages of planning, design and construction.

Residential Care Homes

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what mechanism there is to link levels of state funding and the quality of care elderly residents can expect.

Mr. Dorrell: The Government determine the amount of aggregate external finance each local authority will receive on the basis of standard spending assessments. It is for each authority to determine its own priorities including appropriate care for the elderly residents it supports.

Liverpool Health Authority (Chairman)

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what qualifications are required for appointment to the post of chairman of Liverpool health authority.

Mr. Dorrell: Chairmen of health authorities are appointed for the personal skills and experience they can bring to the strategic and management issues facing the authority. They are expected to either live or work or have other links with the community they serve.

General Practitioner Budgets

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish in the Official Report the number of general practitioners who have opted to become budget holders in each district health authority area under the South East Thames regional health authority area, and the number of budget holders as a percentage proportion of the total number of general practitioners in each district; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I intend to make a statement to the House on the recognition of general practitioner fundholders throughout the country in the next few weeks. I will then write to my hon. Friend with the detailed information he seeks.

Food Hygiene

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what restriction will now apply to the sending of Patum Peperium, a gentleman's relish, and similar products through the post in light of the Food Hygiene (Amendment) Regulations 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The foods covered by temperature controls are listed in the Food Hygiene (Amendment) Regulations 1990, copies of which are available in the Library. Food businesses will need to consider whether their products are required to be temperature controlled or whether the exemptions for foods which have been processed or packaged to prevent the growth of pathogenic micro-organisms at ambient temperatures apply.

Patum Peperium may well have a high enough salt content to prevent the growth of pathogenic micro-organisms without the need for temperature control but this will depend on the particular recipe used and is for the manufacturer to determine.

Pensioners (Sight Tests)

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many pensioners had sight tests in the year 1988-89 and in the most recent 12-month period for which figures are available.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not available centrally.

Eggs

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if, pursuant to his reply of 22 January, Official Report, column 162, he will now recirculate to NHS district general managers a copy of the letter of 31 July 1988 advising against the use of unpasteurised egg in recipes where the egg is unlikely to be cooked thoroughly.

Mr. Dorrell: The existing guidance to all NHS district managers, given in the letter issued on 29 July 1988 remains extant. The Department keeps this matter under regular review and will issue reminders or revised guidance as necessary.

Tobacco

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will raise at the Council of Health Ministers the impact on health in the third world and eastern Europe of the dumping of high tar tobacco produced in the EC; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: We will continue to ensure that the health issues arising from the EC tobacco regime are given full consideration in Europe.

NHS Costs

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average cost per ambulance emergency call out, and the average cost per day of an ambulance on non-emergency work for the last year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The information collected centrally relating to the costs of ambulance services does not allow apportionment between emergency and non-emergency uses.

Immunisation and Cervical Screening

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of general practitioners in each family health services authority received target payments for childhood immunisation and cervical screening in the first six months of 1990-91.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The table shows the proportion of GPs in each family health services authority qualifying for target payments at 1 April 1990. GPs received these target payments at the end of September 1990.

Note:
Figures for higher and lower payments may not add to TOTAL because of rounding error.

For childhood immunisations, the higher target—£1,737 per annum for the average list size—is paid for 90 per cent. coverage and the lower target—£579—for 70 per cent. coverage. The necessary coverage levels are the same for the pre-school booster targets—the higher target is worth £579 and the lower target £193. For cervical cancer screening, the higher target—£2,202—necessitates 80 per cent. coverage and the lower target—£734—necessitates 50 per cent. coverage.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average cost per pint of blood used in the health service in the last year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: Blood is donated by volunteer donors and no charge is made to NHS hospitals for it. The average cost of collecting, processing and transporting a unit of blood in 1989-90 was £29·25.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average cost (a) per general practitioner appointment and (b) per general practitioner home visit, in the last year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average cost in the last year for which figures are available for the supply of a new (a) general hospital, (b) ambulance, (c) general practitioner surgery, (d) dental surgery and (e) prescription.

Mr. Dorrell: The average gross cost of a prescription dispensed by community pharmacists or dispensing doctors in England in 1989-90 was £6·36. For the other items mentioned, the cost will vary according to the specification adopted and no meaningful average cost can be given.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in the last year for which figures are available, what is the average cost to the taxpayer per adult and per child visit to the dentist; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: Data are collected centrally only on numbers of courses of treatment, not individual patient visits. The estimated average cost of an NHS adult course of treatment in England in 1989-90, net of patient charges, was £18. The estimated average cost of a course of treatment for a child in the same period was £17.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average cost per adult and per child patient for treatment by general practitioner and hospital service for asthma for the last year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not collected centrally.

Electoral Statistics

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the largest, smallest and average electorate for constituencies in (a) England, (b) Wales, (c) Northern Ireland and (d) Scotland.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is shown in the table in respect of the 1990 electoral registers.

	Parliamentary electors (1990)
England
Largest constituency: Milton Keynes	109,839
Average size of 523 constituencies	69,577

Average size of 38 constituencies	58,093
Smallest constituency: Meirionnydd Nant Conwy	32,805
Northern Ireland
Largest constituency: East Londonderry	75,407
Average size of 17 constituencies	66,506
Smallest constituency: Belfast South	53,516
Scotland
Largest constituency: Gordon	77,974
Average size of 72 constituencies	54,676
Smallest constituency: Western Isles	23,084

Numbers on the 1991 registers are currently being collected from electoral registration officers.

GPs (Deprived Area Payments)

Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he is satisfied with the working of the special deprived area payments for general practitioners.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 8 February 1991]: We are satisfied that our policy objective of targeting the payments on those practices that service areas of highest deprivation is being met. We have received a number of representations about the scheme and we have agreed that officials will discuss these with the British Medical Association.

Hospital Food

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether his Department has issued any guidance about the introduction of charging patients for food in hospital trusts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 8 February 1991]: No. The provision of meals to NHS hospital in-patients is not subject to compulsory charges. Hospitals may offer a wider choice of menu and charge for the additional services provided.

SCOTLAND

Flat-finding Agencies

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will consider licensing flat-finding agents or take other steps to ensure that they are suitable people to conduct this work.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I do not believe such action to be necessary.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received on the activities of Lothian Rentals flat-finding agency in Edinburgh and their implications for the law governing the regulations of such activities.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I have received no such representations.

Clinical Physics and Bioengineering

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the percentage change in the salary costs as a result of the change to the medical technical officer grade in those staff administered by the Department of Clinical Physics and Bioengineering, West Graham street, Glasgow; and what are the equivalent figures for those staff in Lothian, Fife, Grampian and Tayside health boards.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The costs of introducing the medical technical officer grade arose from the transfer of staff to a common pay spine and from the assignment of individuals to particular grades within the new structure following local review. These costs are not available centrally and could not be obtained without disproportionate costs.

Housing Finance

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the housing support grant for Renfrew district council for each year since 1975.

Council House Sales

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration is being given to undertaking a ministerial review of the long-term consequences of the right to buy provision in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Office is to conduct a new research study to evaluate the impact of the right to buy. The study will be carried out over an 18-month period and will update previous research carried out into this subject. We will consider any policy implications of the findings in due course.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what is the current percentage rate of disposal of public sector tenancies to owner-occupation under the right-to-buy provisions shown by each local authority housing area in Scotland;

(2) how many properties have been sold in Scotland under the right-to-buy provisions, shown by each local authority housing area in Scotland, indicating the percentage of the public sector stock tenancies remaining under management of each housing authority.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The table gives details of sales made under the right-to-buy legislation. The second column shows the percentage of stock sold since October 1980, and the third column shows the component of that percentage represented by sales in 1990. Information is not held centrally about the management arrangements for public sector stock.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the level of public sector tenanted housing stock below which the provisions of the right to buy would make sensible local authority strategic management of housing impossible to achieve.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No such level has been set.

Rented Housing

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the total number of houses for rent built by Scottish Homes or its predecessor within Renfrew district for each year since 1960.

Homelessness

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to review or amend any provisions of the Homeless Persons (Scotland) Act; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I have no current plans to review or amend further the provisions of part II of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987. But I expect to issue soon a revised code of guidance on the homelessness legislation in Scotland, to which local authorities are to have regard in exercising their homelessness functions.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the average length of stay for families with dependent children, who were accepted as homeless by their local authority, and placed in bed-and-breakfast accommodation, in 1990 or at the nearest available date; and if he will express the answer in terms of the average length of stay for Scotland and for each district and islands council.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not collected centrally.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many families with dependent children were accepted as homeless in 1990, or at the nearest available date.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: According to returns so far submitted by local authorities to the Scottish Office, they accepted 9,900 households with dependent children as homeless in 1989-90. Some returns are known to be outstanding.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many families with dependent children, accepted as homeless by their local authority, were placed in bed-and-breakfast accommodation in 1990 or at the nearest available date; and if he will express the answer in terms of the total number for Scotland and for each district and islands council.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Returns so far submitted by local authorities to the Scottish Office indicate that in 1989-90 they placed 670 households with dependent children, whom they had accepted as homeless, in bed and breakfast accommodation temporarily pending inquiries under the legislation, and 166 in such accommodation following assessment. Some households may be included in both these figures, which represent less than 7 per cent. and less than 2 per cent. respectively of the number of households with dependent children accepted as homeless in 1989-90. A breakdown by district and islands council is set out in the table. Some returns are known to be outstanding.

Mental Illness

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many patients receiving treatment for mental illness in Scottish hospitals were eligible to vote in 1990.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is not available.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to assist long-term patients receiving treatment for mental illness in Scottish hospitals to exercise their right to vote in local and parliamentary elections.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Guidance to health boards relating to the electoral registration of informal patients in mental illness and mental handicap hospitals was last issued in 1987 and the need for further guidance is kept under review. Explanatory leaflets for patients are distributed within relevant hospitals and informal patients are given the opportunity prior to 10 October each year to complete the necessary patient's declaration form.

Stolen Equipment

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a list of the equipment stolen from the Lord Advocate's Department in the last three years for which information is available; and what was the approximate value of each item.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There have been no such losses.

New Housing

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the total levels of new housebuilding, houses completed, in each year from 1970 to 1979 and in 1989 in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested for the years 1970 to 1978 was given on page 8 of "Scottish Housing Statistics No. 12, 4th Quarter 1980". Figures for 1979 and 1989 appear in table 5 of the Scottish Office quarterly statistical bulletins on housing. These publications are available in the House Library.

Mortgages

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the total volume of mortgage lending in Scotland in real terms in each year since 1970.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not available.

City Hospital, Aberdeen

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the tender value of the private medical company for the 60-bed geriatric unit at the City hospital in Aberdeen; and what was the value of the nearest unsuccessful tender.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 8 February 1991]: The successful tender was valued at £2,356,000. The nearest unsuccessful tender was received from a second private company and the value of its tender is commercially confidential. Grampian health board has explained to both that company and the in-house team the reasons why they were unsuccessful.

Higher Education

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what numbers of students attended the centrally funded education institutions in 1989-90.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 8 February 1991]: In 1989-90 a total of 29,871 full-time and 10,508 part-time higher education students attended institutions which are centrally funded by the Scottish Office Education Department. Provisional figures show an additional 184 full-time and 22,953 part-time students attending non-advanced courses in these institutions in 1989-90.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the operation of the relaxation of the attendance allowance rule for terminally ill people since its inception.

Mr. Scott: Provisions introduced with effect from 1 October 1990, enable anyone with a terminal illness to qualify for attendance allowance at the higher rate from the date of claim. Up to 31 December 1990 a total of 13,600 claims were decided under these provisions and of these decisions over 13,000 were successful. The majority of such claims were cleared within two weeks.

Local Offices, Doncaster

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will review the level of funding of his Department's offices in the Doncaster area, in the light of changing demand;

(2) what plans he has to alter the work load and staffing at each of his Department's offices in the Doncaster area.

Miss Widdecombe: The Department allocates funds for staffing and administrative expenditure to local offices using systems designed to match resources to requirements. Staffing is based on workload which local offices record each month, and resource managers take account of revised workload forecasts when reviewing local office complements. Expenditure is reviewed centrally and locally each month.

The Department's offices in Doncaster are being combined to form one administrative unit for management purposes. The staffing for 1991-92 will encompass the combined complement from the two existing offices.

Pension Ages

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his latest estimate of the cost of equalising pension ages for men and women for (a) retirement pension and (b) income support pensioner premiums; and how these estimates would differ if (i) spouse additions and (ii) widow/widower pensions were paid on the same basis on male and female pensions at (1) 65 years, (2) 60 years or (3) 55 years.

Miss Widdecombe: The cost of paying state retirement pension to men from age 60 has been estimated at about £3,000 million a year in 1985-86 prices. Paying pensions to women from age 65 has been estimated to save about £500 million in 1985-86 prices. Income support pensioner premiums are payable to men and women at age 60. The cost of providing State pensions to men and women at age 55 and the further information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Residential Homes

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what information he obtained about the supply and demand of places in residential and nursing homes for the elderly before the setting of income support levels;

(2) what information he obtained about dependency levels in residential homes for the elderly before setting income support levels;

(3) what information he obtained about charges for extras in residential and nursing homes for the elderly before the setting of income support levels;

(4) what information he obtained about differences in staff costs between residential and nursing homes for the elderly before the setting of income support levels;

(5) what information he obtained about regional variations in charges in residential and nursing homes for the elderly before the setting of income support levels.

Miss Widdecombe: A considerable amount of information, including all these issues, received from various interested parties as well as information from a survey commissioned by the Department, and carried out by management consultants Price Waterhouse, was considered before the income support limits were set for residential care and nursing homes. A copy of the Price Waterhouse report has been placed in the Library. Information about occupancy of homes is obtained from quarterly statistical returns.

Stolen Equipment

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a list of the equipment stolen from his Department in the last three years for which information is available; and what was the approximate value of each item.

Mr. Jack: The information in the table relates to the number of break-ins in offices other than London headquarters, which is the responsibility of the Department of Health. Further information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

	Number of break-ins	Estimated value of equipment £
1987-88	90	[1]
1988-89	54	[1]
1989-90	85	32,000

State Pensions

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish in the Official Report the state pension entitlement for (a) single persons and (b) married couples as of April 1991; and if he will show comparable figures for April 1979 and indicate the change in real and nominal terms.

Miss Widdecombe: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 24 October last year, basic retirement pension from April 1991 will be £52 for a single person and £83·25 for a married couple. The amounts paid in April 1979 were £19·50 and £31·20 respectively. The nominal change in the level of benefit over this period is therefore £32·50 for a single person and £52·05 for a married couple. Measurement of the change in the real value of benefit over this period cannot be calculated until the retail prices index for April 1991 is available.

Benefits

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 11 December 1990, Official Report, column 196, concerning the value of benefits in November 1979 and April 1991, if he will give the answer using the index of retail prices which applies to the annual uprating of benefits in April 1991.

Miss Widdecombe: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 6 December 1990 at column 196.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he would list for each of the benefits for which he is responsible the statutory duties which lie upon his Department to encourage greater take-up of each benefit.

Miss Widdecombe: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 7 February 1991.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the number and proportion of claimants who are disqualified for unemployment benefit, and of these, the number and proportion who are in receipt of reduced income support.

Mr. Jack: The latest information at May 1989 shows that of the 1,090,631 income support claimants registered as available for employment 31,574—2·9 per cent.—were receiving reduced income support because of disqualification or disallowance. Other information on numbers of unemployed claimants and the decisions of adjudication officers is in "Unemployment Benefit Statistics—Quarterly Analysis of Unemployed Claimants" and "Unemployment Benefit Statistics—Quarterly Analysis of Decisions of Adjudication Officers", copies of which are in the Library.

Welfare Rights

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assistance and support his Department has given to local authority welfare rights teams since 1979; and what further help is planned.

Mr. Jack: The Department welcomes the existence of welfare rights advisers and encourages co-operation at a local level between such advisers and departmental staff.

Pensioners

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners claim income support; and what this is as a percentage of all pensioners.

Miss Widdecombe: In May 1989, the latest date for which figures are available, 1,552,000 pensioners received income support. This was 15 per cent. of all pensioners.

Sources:

Annual statistical inquiry May 1989 for income support recipients.

Office of Population Censuses and Surveys for population figures.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners are wholly dependent upon the state pension for their income; and what is this as a percentage of all pensioners.

Miss Widdecombe: Income-related benefits are available to help people whose only income is the basic state retirement pension, although a few do not claim their full entitlement. Available information suggests that less than 1 per cent. of people over state pension age receive only the basic state retirement pension and no other state benefits or private income. It is not possible to estimate precisely the total number of pensioners in this position.

Severe Weather Payments

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many payments have been made under the severe weather payments system in each area covered by the relevant weather station for each week since mid-January.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Independent Living Fund

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what provision he proposes for those currently assisted by the independent living fund after its abolition in 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Our plans for the future of the independent living fund are still under consideration following the decision to phase the implementation of community care.

Social Fund

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people within the last year applied for (a) a crisis loan, (b) a budgeting loan and (c) a community care grant from social fund, Merseyside; how many were subsequently awarded payment in each of the stated categories; how many people were refused help and for what reasons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 28 January 1991]: The information requested is given in the following tables:

Community Charge Benefit

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the average number of families who received rate rebates or community charge benefit in each year from 1980 to 1990 in the categories of (a) retirement pensioners, (b) invalidity pensioners, (c) unemployed, (d) lone parents, (e) students, (f) single people and (g) families in paid work.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 29 January 1991]: The table shows the number of households, including single people, receiving rate rebates or community charge benefit, broken down into such categories as are available. Figures are not available prior to 1983, as the housing benefit scheme did not then exist in its present form.

[2] Aged 60 to 79 and who qualify for higher pensioner premium.
[3] Not including cases where neither income support nor unemployment benefit are in payment.
Notes:
(1) The available figures relate to a combination of data on income support and non-income support cases. The income support data relates to statistical inquiries carried out in May of each year. The non-income support data relate to those carried out in September of each year except 1984 (October) and 1988 and 1989 (May).
(2) Data on community charge rebates in Scotland for 1989 and community charge benefit in Great Britain as a whole for 1990 are not available. The 1989 figures shown, therefore, relate to England and Wales only.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Procedural Changes

45. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Lord President of the Council what progress has been made in respect of the proposed procedural changes in the House; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacGregor: A number of procedural changes have been made over the past year or so on matters including private Members' time and oral questions.

The Procedure Committee is continuing its work and I am hopeful that its inquiry into parliamentary questions will provide the basis for further improvements. In addition, I remain willing to receive ideas from Members for improvements in our procedures, including those which will reduce costs.

Security

46. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will make a further statement on security within the Palace of Westminster.

Mr. MacGregor: It has been the long-standing practice of Leaders of the House not to comment on matters of security within the Palace of Westminster. I can however reassure my hon. Friend that the matter is kept under continuing review, and I am sure that he has noticed some considerable changes recently.

European Parliament

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Lord President of the Council what recent discussions there have been concerning the improvement of communications facilities between the House and the European Parliament.

Mr. MacGregor: The question of establishing easier telecommunications and postal links with institutions of the European Communities, including the European Council, is expected to be considered at the next meeting of the Services Committee on 13 February.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Stolen Equipment

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will publish a list of the equipment stolen from his Department in the last three years for which information is available; and what was the approximate value of each item.

Mr. MacGregor: No equipment has been reported stolen from the Privy Council office in the last three years.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Duchy (Official Visit)

29. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he intends to pay an official visit to the duchy.

Mr. Chris Patten: I recently attended a meeting of the Knowsley magisterial advisory committee on Merseyside, and I hope to pay another visit to the duchy in the near future.

34. Mr. Hind: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he will next make an official visit to the duchy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: I have no precise plans to make an official visit to the duchy at present, although I hope to do so in the near future. I recently visited the Knowsley magisterial advisory committee and was very impressed by its businesslike approach to the difficult and responsible job it has in finding candidates who are entirely suitable for the important judicial appointment of justice of the peace.

Duchy Business

35. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how much time he has spent on duchy business since he last answered oral questions.

Mr. Chris Patten: Up to a quarter of my time is spent carrying out my duties as Chancellor of the Duchy.

Duchy Land Holdings

36. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will commission an environmental assessment of the duchy and of all its land holdings.

Mr. Chris Patten: Management of the duchy estates is conducted by professionally qualified people, who take into active consideration the effect upon the environment of any decisions which they recommend. The range of such decisions extends from the control of pollution to concern for the impact on the environment of any new development on the duchy's land holdings. I do not, therefore, consider any further environmental assessment necessary.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Stolen Equipment

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish a list of the equipment stolen from his Ministry in the last three years for which information is available; and what was the approximate value of each item.

Mr. Curry: All cases of theft from the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food during the last three years for which information is available and for which authority has been granted to write off the loss incurred are shown in the following table:

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if any restriction is placed by the EC on the tar levels of tobaccos exported to the third world.

Mr. Curry: No. The specification of tobacco exports is a matter for commercial decision between buyer and seller.

Agricultural Expenditure

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has submitted to the Council of Ministers about the reduction of agricultural spending to be submitted to the GATT conference; and if he will place his proposals in the Library.

Mr. Curry: The Commission negotiates in the GATT in close consultation with member states on the basis of the offer which the Council of Ministers approved in November. We have not submitted proposals to the Council but with other member states have urged the Commission to continue the effort to find a basis for a successful agreement.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will set out the reasons why the EC has decided to budget for the expenditure of £23,000,000,000 on agriculture in 1991; what is the legal limit for such expenditure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The agreed budget for total EC agriculture expenditure in 1991, including estimated costs arising from German unification, is now 34,785 mecu (£24,240 million). This excludes the 1,000 mecu (£697 million) monetary reserve, which is a provision for increased costs above 400 mecu (£279 million) caused by movements in the dollar/ecu market rate. The budget was based on estimates made last year. Within this total, the budget for market support is 31,516 mecu (£21,962 million) which is subject to a legal limit (the guideline) of 32,511 mecu (£22,656 million).

Tobacco

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the total sum which the EC proposes to spend on the production of tobacco in 1991; and if he will provide separate figures for the proposed spending on storing and on subsidising the export of such tobacco, giving in each case the comparable expenditure figures in 1990 and 1989, respectively.

Mr. Curry: The information requested is shown in the table below:

Milk Quotas

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what will be the fiscal effect on United Kingdom farmers of the Agriculture Council's decision to bring producers' direct sales of yogurt, ice cream and certain other milk products within the scope of Community rules on milk quotas.

Mr. Curry: Producers whose direct sales of milk and milk products exceed their available quota are subject to a supplementary levy of up to 15·7 pence per litre of milk at the current rate. From 1 April 1991 direct sales of yogurt, ice cream and certain other milk products will be taken into account in determining liability for this levy. We are considering how and on what terms to make quota available to producers directly affected by the Council's decision.

Sheep and Cow Subsidies

Mr. Speller: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the sheep subsidy and hill cow payments will be made; what delays there have been in payment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to the replies of 18 January and 31 January 1990]: My right hon. Friends and I have now completed the annual review of the economic conditions in the United Kingdom's less-favoured areas, in consultation with representatives of farming interests. The review has shown that average net farm incomes of livestock producers in our hill and upland areas are forecast to fall even further in 1990-91 following the significant decline also experienced in the previous year.

We have concluded that, in response to the exceptionally difficult circumstances faced by producers, there should be increases in all the rates for hill livestock compensatory allowances but with larger increases for the sectors in greatest difficulty.

Subject to parliamentary approval the new rates will be as follows:

	Severely disadvantaged area		Disadvantaged area
	New rate £	Existing rate £	New rate £	Existing rate £
Cows	63·30	54·50	31·65	27·25
Hardy breed ewes	8·75	7·50	n/a	n/a
Other ewes	4·90	4·50	2·45	2·25

The new financial limit of 1·4 livestock units per hectare comes into effect from 1 January 1991 and will limit payments to those producers who stock above this level. There will be no other changes to the conditions of the scheme.

We shall be laying before Parliament a draft Statutory Instrument giving effect to the new rates as soon as possible. The increased rates are expected to cost £17·5 million in a full year.

This 14 per cent. average increase, which follows an increase for hardy breed ewes worth over £5 million last year will bring HLCA payments in the United Kingdom to some £142 million in a full scheme year.

All sectors of agriculture face a period of change. There is the need to adapt to new market requirements and to find support arrangements which pose a less severe budgetary burden and reflect environmental concerns more effectively. No sector can be exempt from change. But this substantial and increased level of support indicates the Government's continuing commitment to livestock farming in the less favoured areas with the additional contribution it brings in ensuring economic activity in these difficult areas and in providing environmental benefits.

TRANSPORT

Bus and Rail Travellers

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the impact on bus and rail travellers in Greater London of the reduction in transport facilities recently announced by London Regional Transport.

Mr. Freeman: London Buses Limited has announced that it is planning to make a number of alterations to local bus services to match them more closely to passenger demand. Details of all the proposed services are not yet available; they will be the subject of public consultation over the next few months. I understand that the changes that London Underground is developing are mainly reduced counter services at booking offices, made possible by the introduction in recent years of very reliable new ticket machines. I am advised that the changes to train services envisaged by London Underground are modest and are, in the main, aimed at improving reliability on lines where there are problems in providing a full complement of trains.

Halifax-Huddersfield Rail Link

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will allocate funds to ensure that the West Yorkshire passenger transport authority is able to introduce in 1992 the railway link between Halifax and Huddersfield.

Mr. McLoughlin: If the West Yorkshire passenger transport authority seeks resources for this project, we will consider it on its merits, and taking account of the claims of other projects. Credit approvals for 1991-92 have, however, already been allocated, so the earliest that resources for new projects could be made available is 1992-93.

A45

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many separate traffic engineering projects have been undertaken for the purpose of improving Rookery crossroads on the A45 over the past 10 years; how much this has cost in 1990 values; and whether he has any proposals for futher works;

(2) what steps he is taking, together with the Suffolk county council, to help prevent further accidents at Rookery crossroads on the A45; and how soon he expects to publish plans for grade separation of Sow lane traffic entering and exiting Rougham industrial estate and east-west traffic on the A45.

Mr. Chope: There have been six engineering projects costing approximately £50,000 to 1990 prices. I shall write to my hon. Friend with details of proposals for further works.

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the number of injury accidents on or near the A45 at the Rookery crossroads at Rougham near Bury St. Edmunds in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Chope: The number of recorded fatal, serious and slight injury accidents at or within 20m either side of the junction in each of the past 10 years is as follows:

Year	Fatal	Serious	Slight	Total
1980	—	—	1	1
1981	—	1	—	1
1982	—	2	—	2
1983	—	3	—	3
1984	—	—	1	1
1985	—	1	—	1
1986	—	—	1	1
1987	—	1	—	1
1988	—	1	1	2
1989	—	1	5	6
1990	1	—	1	2

Rail Electrification

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce his decision on rail electrification of the Western Region main line west of Reading.

Mr. McLoughlin: British Rail has no current plans for electrification of the main line west of Reading.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, further to his answer of 4 February 1991 Official Report, column 4, whether he will consult the chairman of British Rail in relation to the United Kingdom's participation in the European Commission high level working group with respect to low-platform wagon technology for through freight trains using the channel tunnel.

Mr. Freeman: Yes.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects United Kingdom approval of a standard low bogie system for running Berne gauge freight trains through the channel tunnel on to the United Kingdom railway network to be announced.

Mr. Freeman: Technical approval of freight wagons for operation in the United Kingdom is a matter for British Rail. Freight wagons for operation through the channel tunnel also require approval from Eurotunnel, the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority in consultation with Her Majesty's railway inspectorate, and other European railways. There is no proposal to run Berne gauge trains in the United Kingdom.

Cars (Carbon Dioxide Emissions)

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he intends to introduce stricter limits on carbon dioxide emissions for cars.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to the strategy set out in "This Common Inheritance"—Cmnd. 1200.

Railway Safety

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with British Rail concerning their response mechanism to requests by fire services for trains to be stopped in emergency situations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: This is a matter for British Rail. I understand that BR is reviewing arrangements for emergency communication with fire services, and that BR aims to identify one railway control location for each geographical area of its operations.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what formal machinery exists for meetings between British Rail and representatives of local emergency services.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail liaises at all levels with the emergency services. Emergency procedures are regularly rehearsed both as theoretical and practical exercises to ensure that the emergency services are in a position to deal effectively with any incident that may occur.

DEFENCE

Armed Forces Pensions

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence where the full provisions of the armed forces pension schemes are set out; and if he will summarise them.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The provisions of the armed forces pension scheme are set out in separate documents for each of the three services. For naval personnel, in Orders in Council; for Army personnel, in the Army Pensions Warrant 1977; for RAF personnel, in Queen's Regulations for the Royal Air Forces.

Overall, the provisions of the scheme are extensive and detailed. In broad terms the following are provided for:

—a lump sum and immediate long-service pension for a member who retires on completion of at least a minimum period of reckonable service of 16 years for commissioned officers, and 22 years for other ranks;

—a preserved pension and preserved lump sum, payable at age 60 or transferable to another scheme, for a member who completes at least two years' contracted-out service, but less than the minimum reckonable service required for the award of an immediate long-service pension;

—a lump sum and immediate tax-free pension for a member whose service is terminated prematurely on medical grounds which are attributable to service, and where the assessed degree of disability is 20 per cent. or more;

—a lump sum and immediate pension for a member whose service is terminated prematurely on medical grounds which are not attributable to service, or which are attributable but the assessed degree of disability is less than 20 per cent., provided that at least two years' reckonable service has been given;

—a pension for the eligible widow or widower of a member, which is for current service normally one half of that which would have been payable to the member but which, in the event of death being attributable to service, is at a special enhanced rate;

—a pension for each eligible child, up to age 17 or longer if full-time education continues.

In general the amount of lump sums, and rates of pension, are associated with rank held and length of service given. Awards made in cases where service is terminated on medical grounds which are attributable to service are not less than a guaranteed minimum level related to rank held and the assessed degree of disability. No minimum length of service is required in order for the member to become eligible for such an award nor, in the event of death attributable to service, for an award to any eligible widow or widower and child.

Long-service pensions are increased from age 55 to reflect movements in the retail prices index since the date of award. Other pensions are index-linked from the date of award.

The provisions apply equally to male and female members of the scheme.

Gulf War

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the contributions made in cash and in equipment by each of the allied countries involved in the Gulf war.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The following nations have committed naval, land or air forces, or medical units, to the coalition forces or are providing practical assistance to these forces:

Argentina
Australia
Bahrain
Bangladesh
Belgium
Canada
Czechoslovakia
Denmark
Egypt
France
Greece
Hungary
Italy
Kuwait
Morocco
Netherlands
New Zealand
Niger
Norway
Oman
Pakistan
Poland
Portugal
Qatar
Romania
Saudi Arabia
Senegal
Sierra Leone
Singapore
South Korea
Spain
Sweden
Syria
United Arab Emirates
United Kingdom
United States of America

A contingent of Afghan Mujaheddin is also serving in Saudi Arabia.

In addition to making practical contributions to the coalition force, a number of nations, including Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, UAE and South Korea, are also providing financial support. Japan, Germany and Hong Kong are making a financial contribution to the coalition and Turkey has agreed that the United States may use Turkish bases for operations into Iraq.

The following countries are providing financial or practical assistance, including medical support, to the United Kingdom.

Bahrain
Belgium

Canada
Denmark
Germany
Hong Kong
Japan
Kuwait
Netherlands
New Zealand
Norway
Oman
Portugal
Romania
Saudi Arabia
Singapore
Spain
Sweden
United Arab Emirates

RAF Greenham Common

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the redeployment of units of the United States air force in the United Kingdom will have any bearing on the future of RAF Greenham Common as one of their standby bases.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The redeployment of United States dual capable aircraft in the United Kingdom, announced by my right hon. Friend on 5 February, will not have any effect on the future of RAF Greenham Common as a United States standby base.

Trident

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the latest estimate of the cost of the Trident programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tom King: I am pleased to announce that for the fifth year running there has been, in real terms, a reduction in the estimated cost of the Trident programme. The revised estimate now stands at £9,863 million, based on the exchange rate used for the long-term costing of the defence programme, which this year is £1 = $1·56.

Although this estimate represents a cash increase of £483 million compared to that announced last year, after allowing for the effects of inflation and exchange rate variations, there has been a real reduction of £126 million, and a real reduction of £1,838 million over the original 1982 Trident II estimate. This is additional to the savings resulting from the decision to have United Kingdom missiles processed in the United States facility at King's bay, Georgia.

The proportion of the programme to be undertaken in the United Kingdom has increased from 69 to 71 per cent.

The Select Committee on Defence previously asked that when announcing the annual revised estimate, I should report on the state of the project as a whole. I am pleased to say that the Trident programme remains on schedule to enter service in the mid-1990s. There has been no slippage in the in-service data since the decision to purchase Trident II was announced in March 1982. I am, as in previous years, sending to the Chairman of the Select Committee on Defence and the Public Accounts Committee a more detailed report covering the points on which the Select Committee on Defence sought advice. I am also placing a copy of this report in the Library of the House.

ENERGY

Gas Escapes

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, further to his written answer of 28 January, Official Report, column 423, whether British Gas has any enforceable obligation to make safe any gas escape free of charge or to provide safety checks free of charge where the customer is not elderly or disabled and living alone.

Mr. Moynihan: The obligation to make gas escapes safe free of charge is enforceable as part of British Gas's authorisation. However, there is no obligation on British Gas to offer safety checks free of charge for customers who are neither elderly nor disabled.

Nuclear Plants

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many nuclear plants are located near the west coast of Great Britain.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: There are 12 operating civil nuclear plants located near the west coast of Great Britain. In addition, two Magnox stations, at Berkeley and Hunterston, are in the process of being decommissioned.

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will take steps to ensure that people who applied for shares in the electricity distribution companies are refunded immediately with the funds they submitted for shares with which they were not allocated; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The receiving banks sent refunds before Christmas to the vast majority of the applicants to whom they were due. They deployed substantial resources throughout January to resolve the majority of the relatively small number of outstanding cases, and are dealing with the few that remain as a matter of priority.

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the sum of money submitted for shares in the electricity distribution companies; who has had the use of the money submitted for shares which were not allocated; and what arrangements are being made to pay interest to the owners of the money who have not yet had it returned.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: About £7 billion was submitted in respect of the public offer. Surplus application money was returned to applicants as rapidly as possible: the interest earned on this money in the interim will accrue to the taxpayer. The terms and conditions of the sale made it clear that no interest on such funds would be payable to applicants.

Electricity Supply

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what consultations he has had with the Director General of OFFER and the chairmen of the regional electricity companies regarding the security of supply of electricity for space-heating and cooking to the elderly, the infirm and the very young during the current cold snap.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The code of practice operated by the regional electricity companies makes it clear that no consumer in genuine difficulty with their payments will be disconnected, provided that they contact their regional electricity company and agree and keep to a payment arrangement. In addition, the Prime Minister announced on 7 February that cold weather payments to vulnerable groups in receipt of income support had been increased to £6 from 1 February and that the whole of the United Kingdom would qualify for the period from 1 to 7 February.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what consultations he has had with (a) the chairmen of the regional electricity companies and (b) the Director General of Electricity regulation regarding the level of cut-offs in domestic electricity supply during the present cold snap.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I have given him today. The latest available 12-monthly figures show disconnections for non-payment of bills standing at their lowest level since records began in 1976.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his answer of 30 January, Official Report, column 507, for what reasons he decided not to maintain figures concerning the proportion of eligible homes in England and Wales with thermostats installed on 50 per cent. or more radiator valves.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The energy efficiency industry provides the Energy Efficiency Office in my Department with information on the sales of various types of insulation and heating products, including thermostatic radiator valves, thus enabling the Energy Efficiency Office to monitor trends in the industry. However, the information provided does not enable the incidence of installation of thermostatic radiator valves in domestic premises to be monitored, and my Department does not require such information in the normal conduct of its business.

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he intends to publish forecasts as to when he anticipates different energy efficiency measures will achieve 50 per cent. of the eligible market.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I have no plans to publish such forecasts. Although the Government will continue to promote and encourage greater energy efficiency in the home, the take-up of individual measures by householders will depend on numerous factors, which will vary from product to product. The Energy Efficiency Office in my Department seeks to assess the success of its programmes and activities by evaluations, market research surveys, examination of trade sales figures and so on, but does not attempt to forecast future levels of market penetration.

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has on the proportion of lighting which has been converted to energy-efficient lighting at (a) the Palace of Westminster, (b) Government buildings, (c) establishments owned or occupied in each Government Department and (d) local authorities.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: As part of the Government's drive to improve energy efficiency in Government buildings, my Energy Efficiency Office gives advice, and encourages Departments to adopt cost-effective energy efficiency measures including lighting. However each Department has responsibility for the energy management of its own estate, and the information requested is not held centrally.

Electricity Industry Conference

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he, or officials of his Department, have been invited to participate in the conference on the electricity industry post privatisation, to be held in London on 15 April.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Yes.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Turkey

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will protest to the Turkish Government about the recent confiscation of the magazine Towards 2000 and the summonsing to military court of Mahmut Dikerdem.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We have no plans to raise these cases with the Turkish authorities. But we have repeatedly urged the Turkish authorities, at ministerial level, to respect their obligations under international human rights conventions.

Research and Development

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many research and development agreements and contracts have been funded by departments in the Foreign Office, excluding ODA, at universities and polytechnics; how many universities and polytechnics have received those research and development contracts and agreements; what is their total value in each of the last five years; and if he will list them.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: There have been only two research contracts or agreements funded by the FCO at universities or polytechnics in the last five years. They were:

(i) Study by London University (School of Slavonic and East European Studies) on "The Inter-War Party and Political System in the present non-Soviet Warsaw Pact countries and its relevance today" (1990).

(ii) Study by London University (School of Oriental and African Studies on "Muslim militancy in sub-Saharan Africa") (1990).

The combined cost was £13,245·00.

Aramco Employees, Dhahran

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, further to his answer, Official Report, 4 February, column 1, whether he will instruct the British ambassador to Saudi Arabia to seek an assurance from the president of Aramco that Aramco will not penalise those British nationals under contract to the company who do not attend work during air raid warning periods.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Employees of Aramco are under a contractual agreement to the company. We understand that a few, employed on essential services, are required to work through air raid warning periods. Such persons may, in the circumstances, wish to terminate their contracts. As I informed the hon. Member on 4 February at column 1, the British ambassador to Saudi Arabia has been assured by the president of Aramco that the company would not penalise those who sought to leave because of the war, and that accrued benefits would not be forfeited.

Nuclear Non-proliferation

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the United Kingdom delegation to the 1990 nuclear non-proliferation fourth review conference in Geneva supported paragraphs 1 to 8 of section VIII, concerning attacks on nuclear facilities contained in the addendum to document NPT/CONF.IV/MCIII/L.1/ADD.2.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom did not take a position on the language to which the hon. Gentleman refers.

Iraq

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many cases of breach or suspected breach of sanctions in regard to trade with Iraq have now ben received by the United Nations or brought to the knowledge of Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We follow up reported sanctions breaches both bilaterally and at the UN: these are treated confidentially and no figures on the numbers of suspected or actual cases of sanctions breaches are publicly available. Any cases of sanctions breaches by United Kingdom nationals and companies are a matter for the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry and the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise.

Lebanon

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will take action through the United Nations to require Israel to allow Lebanese Government forces to take up their positions in south Lebanon.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We joined in the unanimous vote of the Security Council on 30 January to review the UNIFIL mandate and to reiterate support for the territorial integrity, sovereignty and independence of Lebanon within its internationally recognised boundaries.

East Timor

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his estimate of the number of civilians in East Timor who have been killed or died from starvation since the invasion by Indonesia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Reliable statistics are unavailable. We believe that the figure may be in the region of 100,000 deaths.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he or officials of his Department has had any contact with the Falantic Liberation Army in East Timor since the invasion by Indonesia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: No.

EC Food Aid

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs from which EC budget the recently agreed 40 million ecu of EC food aid for Romania and Bulgaria is to be paid; and from which Department's budget are Britain's contributions paid to that budget.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The European Council on 10 December 1990 agreed 100 mecu of emergency food aid for Romania and Bulgaria; 30 mecu will come from savings in the 1990 agriculture budget. Following consideration by the 21 December Council, discussion continues on the source of the remaining 70 mecu. The United Kingdom share of this 100 mecu will form part of our contribution to Community own resources in line with all other EC budget expenditure.

The Gulf

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which member states of the allied military force in the Gulf war remain subject to special licensing procedures for military sensitive exports from the United Kingdom.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: All exports of military equipment are subject to stringent licensing control, whatever their destination.

Syria

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the occasions when he or his predecessors have met the Syrian Foreign Minister since 1979; and if he will make a statement on the most recent meeting.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The right hon. Member for Plymouth, Devonport (Dr. Owen), the then Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, met the Syrian Foreign Minister in London in March 1979. As Minister of State, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs met the Syrian Foreign Minister in Damascus in October 1979 and in London in September 1981 and July 1982. My noble Friend the then Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, Lord Pym, met the Syrian Foreign Minister in London in September 1982 and in Damascus in October 1982. My right hon. and learned Friend for Surrey, East (Sir G. Howe), the then Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, had meetings with the Syrian Foreign Minister in New York in September 1983, in Damascus in January 1984, again in New York in September 1984 and lastly in London in March 1986.

The meeting that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs had with Mr. Shara' on 6 February provided the first opportunity since the resumption of diplomatic relations with Syria to discuss regional and bilateral matters at ministerial level. It was timely and valuable.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Alcoholic Beverages

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will conduct an investigation and review of the Food Labelling Regulations 1989 (S.I., 1989, No. 768) to ensure that they do not permit the adulteration of alcoholic beverages as indicated in a recent report from the trading standards department of Cleveland county council, a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. Maclean: I have not yet studied the report to which the hon. Gentleman refers. When I have done so, I will send him a detailed reply.

Consultative Paper

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the consultative paper announced on 28 November, Official Report, column 437, is ready for issue; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Copies of the consultative paper inviting comments on the proposals of myself and the Secretary of State for Wales for reform of the law on agricultural tenancies in England and Wales have been placed in the Library of the House today and made available to interested parties.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Police Officers

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will use his powers under the Police and Criminal Evidence Act to have complaints in respect of the use of racially discriminating language or behaviour by police officers referred automatically to the Police Complaints Authority.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. My right hon. Friend does not believe that it would be appropriate for him to do so.

Police Complaints

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many complaints concerning the use of racially discriminating language or behaviour by police officers were made to the Police Complaints Authority in each of the last five years; and how many were upheld.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Hackney South and Shoreditch (Mr. Sedgemore) on 29 November 1990, at column 452, which gives the available information about such complaints. Figures for 1990 are not yet available.

Political Asylum

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were given political asylum in the United Kingdom in 1990; and what were the comparable figures for each European Community nation.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Full information on grants of asylum in the United Kingdom in 1990 is not yet available. To date, about 1,600 such grants, including associated dependants, are recorded, but this understates because of delays in recording. Information on grants of asylum in other EC countries in 1990 is not yet available.

Ms. Linda Humphries

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for how much longer Linda Humphries is to be held at Risley prior to being sent to Ashworth hospital.

Mrs. Rumbold: I understand that Miss Humphries will be admitted to Ashworth hospital very shortly, as soon as a bed is available.

Remand Centres (Suicides)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of suicides in remand centres, and the centres concerned, for each year since 1985.

Mrs. Rumbold: The numbers of self-inflicted deaths since 1988 by prisoners at establishments whose main role is that of a remand centre have been as follows:

Establishment	1985	1986	1987	1988	1989	1990	Total
Ashford	—	1	1	—	—	—	2
Hindley[1]	—	—	—	—	1	3	4
Risley	1	1	3	4	2	—	11
Total	1	2	4	4	3	3	17

[1] Became a remand centre in spring 1989.

There have been no self-inflicted deaths since 1985 at the following remand centres: Brockhill, Feltham, Glen Parva, Latchmere House, Low Newton, Pucklechurch.

Remand Prisoners

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what training is given to prison officers and prison medical staff in dealing with remand prisoners who are (a) mentally disturbed, (b) drug addicts and (c) have AIDS.

Mrs. Rumbold: Responsibility for the health care of prisoners in any prison service establishment rests with the managing medical officer—MMO—of the establishment. The MMO is also responsible for assessing the further training needs of his or her health care colleagues and ensuring that, to the extent that resources permit, they are met either by making local arrangements for training—for example, by links with local NHS hospitals and clinics—by taking advantage of the wide range of external courses that are available to members of the medical and nursing professions or by securing places on courses organised centrally by the directorate of prison medical services.

Recent courses organised centrally have included 24-week induction courses for hospital officers of which about six weeks are devoted to psychiatric care, one day to AIDS and a half day to drug addiction and dependency; a two-day course and a series of one-day seminars for medical officers on clinical aspects of AIDS; a 10-day course for hospital officers with an emphasis on the nursing care of AIDS patients; and a two-day seminar on drug misuse for medical officers and other staff from establishments for women.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Sudan

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much of the £4 million of famine relief for Sudan, announced on 5 February, will be paid for from the 1991-92 budget.

Mrs. Chalker: The full cost—estimated at £4 million—of the additional 20,000 tonnes of food aid for famine relief in Sudan, which I announced on 5 February, will be met from the 1991-92 aid budget. My officials are already discussing the detailed uses for this pledge with a number of non-governmental organisations. I hope to agree allocations shortly.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Prudential Corporation plc

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will take any action against Prudential Corporation plc for its failure to publish the salaries of directors in its latest accounts in accordance with the requirements of the Companies Acts.

Mr. Redwood: The information to which the hon. Member refers is disclosed at page 41 of the company's report and accounts for the year ended 31 December 1989.

PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Beith: To ask the Prime Minister what has been the total funding to date of the United Kingdom 200 initiative set up by his predecessor under the chairmanship of Mr. Richard Branson; which voluntary organisations have been involved; what have been the achievements of the initiative; whether he has any further proposals to develop this initiative; and whether he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Total Government funding to March 1991 will be £9·434 million. The partner voluntary organisations in England are the British Trust for Conservation Volunteers, the Civic Trust, Community Service Volunteers, Groundwork, Friends of the Earth and the Royal Society for Nature Conservation. In Wales the organisations involved are the same apart from the Civic Trust, and in addition the Keep Wales Tidy Campaign. In Scotland, the organisations are the Scottish Wildlife Trust, Scottish Conservation Projects, Community Service Volunteers and Keep Scotland Beautiful.

The main achievements have been high-quality, practical environmental improvement projects, training and work experience together with the creation of new environmental enterprises. This work has been carried out in partnership with the public and private sectors. In 1989-90 there were 717 projects which generated 7,819 training places and 54,218 volunteers and which attracted £2·423 million support from the private sector.

In England United Kingdom 2000 phase 2 began on 31 March 1991 and, subject to performance, the voluntary organisations will continue to receive grant until March 1993. United Kingdom 2000 (Scotland) will be launched as a company limited by guarantee in April 1991. The initiative in Wales has recently been fully reviewed; the next steps are now under consideration.

United Nations

Mr. Wray: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if he will make it his policy to put forward proposals to amend the United Nations charter to provide for periodic elections of all members of the United Nations Security Council;

(2) if he will make it his policy to put forward proposals to amend the United Nations charter to provide that United Nations Security Council members should have veto powers;

(3) if he will make it his policy to put forward proposals to amend the United Nations charter to provide that in the event of war waged in the name of the United Nations basic decisions are taken by all member countries of the United Nations with an ad hoc executive committee to supervise the conduct of hostilities by the armed forces acting for the United Nations.

The Prime Minister: No. The Government do not believe that reform of the United Nations charter is either necessary or desirable.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Prime Minister when he expects the United Nations Security Council to meet to discuss the conduct of the war in the Persian Gulf.

The Prime Minister: The United Nations Security Council has met frequently since the outbreak of hostilities in the Gulf on 2 August, most recently in informal consultations on 8 February.

Lanarkshire

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Prime Minister what specific plans he has to improve investment in Lanarkshire.

The Prime Minister: The Lanarkshire working group, which met last month, will identify the main constraints to revitalising the Lanarkshire economy and recommend measures to resolve those problems. Investment in Lanarkshire from the private and public sector, is among the working group's concerns. The working group expects to report to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland around the end of April.

Pensioners

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Prime Minister what is the estimated additional cost incurred weekly by pensioners in Northern Ireland for heating, lighting and travel when expenditure is compared with that of pensioners in a comparable region in Great Britain.

The Prime Minister: Information on the expenditure of pensioner households[1] on heating, lighting and travel is available at household level from the family expenditure survey. Northern Ireland compares with Wales in terms of average normal weekly disposable income for all households, including pensioner households. The table providese information from the amalgamated results of the 1988-89 family expenditure survey for pensioner households.

Average Weekly Household Expenditure on Selected Items:

	Northern Ireland	Wales	Additional expenditure in Northern Ireland
Total motoring and fares	5·20	4·29	0·91
Fuel, light and power	13·11	8·55	4·56

[1] A pensioner household is defined as one in which at least three quarters of the total income of the household is derived from national insurance retirement and similar pensions.

1851 Exhibition

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Prime Minister when the holder of his office last attended a meeting of the royal commissioners for the exhibition of 1851.

The Prime Minister: I am not aware of such a meeting.

Probation Officers, Liverpool

Mr. Parry: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he has received from the probation officer based at Liverpool about salaries; and what reply he has sent.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has received representations from seven probation officers from Merseyside about probation officers' salaries. They either have received or will receive official replies.

Correspondence

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Prime Minister whether the policy of the Government with regard to correspondence between hon. Members and officials remains as set out in the letter from the hon. Member for Mid-Worcestershire (Mr. Forth) to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Hodge Hill, of 18 May 1989.

The Prime Minister: It is for Ministers in each Department to decide how correspondence will be handled. Following the recent scrutiny of ministerial correspondence, Departments are considering how to assist Members of Parliament to direct their inquiries to the point which is best able to give them a fast, informed and helpful reply.

The Government reply to the eighth report from the Treasury and Civil Service Committee—Cmnd 1263—states that Ministers will normally ask the chief executive of an agency to reply to letters that concern day-to-day operational matters delegated to the agency.

East Timor

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the Timor Gap agreement between Indonesia and Australia; and whether this agreement was discussed during his telephone conversation with Prime Minister Hawke of Australia on 5 February.

The Prime Minister: The Timor Gap agreement is a matter between Indonesia and Australia, who recognised East Timor's incorporation into Indonesia in 1979. The agreement in no way affects our own stance on recognition. I have not discussed the agreement with Prime Minister Hawke.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 12 February.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. I also called on Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth the Queen Mother, and presented her with a gift from the Cabinet to mark her 90th year. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today. This evening I hope to have an audience of Her Majesty the Queen.

The Gulf

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what steps have been taken by allied bombing sorties over Iraq to avoid disruption of the ecological balance of the marshes in the River Euphrates delta and to the habitat of the striped hyenas, jackals and wolves of the western desert of Iraq and northern Saudi Arabia.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 8 February 1991]: Allied aircrews have instructions to attack only military targets which could pose a threat to allied forces or facilities supporting Iraq's occupation of Kuwait. The missions are carefully planned to minimise the risk of damage to other areas.

Nuclear Test Veterans

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer to the right hon. Member for Worthing on 4 December 1990, Official Report, column 17, by what process British nuclear test veterans may seek to establish the Crown's legal liability for compensation for the effects of radiation while serving in Her Majesty's forces.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 11 February 1991]: The process to establish the Crown's legal liability in this matter is the need, in common law, to show that participants in the test programme had been exposed to radiation due to Ministry of Defence negligence and that such exposure caused them harm. The Government commissioned a study by the National Radiological Protection Board into this and the report published in 1988 did not establish a causal link between participation and an increased incidence of cancer. A further study by the NRPB to validate the findings of the previous study has been commissioned and the report is due to be published in 1992.

Elderly People

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Prime Minister if he will convene a working group comprised of representatives of the Departments of Health, Social Security and the Environment and of the public, private and voluntary sector providers, funders and user representatives to undertake an investigation into problems and issues involved in funding care for the elderly.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 11 February 1991]: There are regular opportunities for interdepartmental consultation on the care needs of elderly people. Provider and user interests are fully reflected in this process. We believe that the creation of a formal working group of the kind suggested would add little to the existing effective collaboration machinery, and might in fact diminish its effectiveness.

Toxteth Riots

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Prime Minister if he will now place in the Library (a) the report of the Secretary of State for the Environment about the Toxteth riots, entitled "It Took a Riot", (b) the letter of the right hon. and learned Member for Surrey, East (Sir G. Howe) in response to that report and (c) the report of the former Central Policy Review Staff on problems of the inner cities; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 11 February 1991]: No.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Child Care Costs

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the change in Treasury income during the 1991-92 financial year resulting from the introduction of tax allowance for child care costs equivalent to (a) £50 a week and (b) £500 a year, assuming one tax relief per family set against the taxable income of the mother, giving separate figures for (i) all families with children under the age of 16 years and (ii) families with at least one child under the age of five years.

Mr. Maude: Estimates of the cost of extra allowances to working married mothers and lone parents in 1991-92 are given in the table. They are based on projections from the 1988 and 1989 family expenditure surveys and are therefore provisional.

Cost (£ billion)

	Allowance of
	(a) £50 per week	(b) £500 per year
Allowance to those with
(i) children under 16	1·3	0·3
(ii) children under 5	0·4	0·1

Public Expenditure

Mr. Ridley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the change in public spending, in real terms, between 1979 and 1990, expressed as a percentage in (a) the national health service, (b) the social security programme, (c) local authority education spending, (d) higher and further education expenditure, (e) subsidies to councils and housing, (f) associations in pursuit of providing cheap housing for the less well-off, (g) housing benefit, (h) rate rebates and community charge rebates and (i) the arts; and if he will also give the real-terms increase in the gross national product over the same period.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Information is not readily available in exactly the form requested. Information is, however, available on general Government expenditure by function over this period and is given in tables 2.2—cash figures—and 2.3—real terms figures—of the "Statistical Supplement to the 1990 Autumn Statement"—Cm 1520. The percentage changes between 1979-80 and 1990-91 in the real-term figures for the functions covering items listed in the question are as follows:

	Per cent.
Health	+37
Social Security	+35
Education and Science	+16
Housing	−54
Arts and libraries	+38

Information on individual components within each function could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

A forecast of the gross national product for 1990-91 is not readily available to allow the corresponding percentage change to be calculated. Based on the autumn statement forecast for 1990-91, gross domestic product is estimated to have risen by about 25 per cent. in real terms over the period 1979-80 to 1990-91.

Inflation

Mr. Lester: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his Department's policy regarding the extent to which (a) quangos and (b) voluntary organisations which receive financial support are compensated for inflation.

Mr. Mellor: Funding of non-departmental public bodies and voluntary organisations is a matter for the relevant sponsoring Department. There is no automatic compensation for inflation.

Severely Disabled People

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received concerning the possibility of granting income tax relief to severely disabled people who have to pay for nursing attendant care in order that they may continue to work and to live as independently as possible; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I have received one such representation, but, at this time of year, the right hon. Gentleman will not expect me to comment further.

Efficient Cars

Mr. Soley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has any plans to introduce fiscal initiatives to encourage motor manufacturers to produce more efficient cars.

Mr. Maude: I cannot anticipate my right hon. Friend's Budget statement.

Customs and Excise Management Act

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list in the Official Report all successful prosecutions made under the Customs and Excise Management Act 1979.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Information is published in the annual report of the Commissioners of Customs and Excise, a copy of which is in the Library.

Personal Equity Plans

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest figures for the progress of personal equity plans.

Mr. Maude: I am pleased to say that PEPs continue to be very successful. In the 15 months to March 1990 a total of 580,000 plans were taken out, with initial investment of £1,600 million. The provisional figures for the first two quarters of 1990-91 show that a high level of enthusiasm for PEPs continues, with a further 200,000 plans taken out and £600 million invested. The average amount invested remains approximately £3,000.

The total number of plans taken out since PEPs started is now nearly 1·2 million. The total subscribed—ignoring investment growth—is almost £3 billion.

The cost of the income tax relief is estimated at £20 million for 1989-90 and £45 million for 1990-91.

WALES

Planning Officers

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will bring forward legislative proposals to prevent local authority planning officers leaving their council employment and setting up private planning consultancies operating in their original areas of jurisdiction.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: No.

Students

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what number and what percentage of full-time students over the age of 18 years in Wales are studying in (a) further education and tertiary colleges and (b) maintained 11 to 18 years schools.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The number and percentage of full-time students aged over 18 years of age for 1989-90 are as follows:

	Number	Per cent.
Further education and tertiary colleges[1]
Aged 19	1,104	28
Aged 20 and over[2]	2,759	70
Maintained secondary schools[3]
11-18	39	1
Other[4]	21	1
Total students	3,923	100

[1] Full-time and sandwich students on further education courses at higher and further education tertiary colleges. At 31 August 1989.
[2] Includes age not known.
[3] Aged 19 at 31 August 1989.
[4] 6th form colleges in Clwyd and South Glamorgan and senior comprehensive school (14-18) in Gwent.

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what numbers and what percentage of full-time students in further education colleges in each county of Wales are studying (a) A and AS level, (b) BTEC, first and national diploma and (c) GCSE.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information for 1989-90 is as follows:

	A and A/S levels		BTEC first and national diploma		GCSE
	Number	per cent.	Number	per cent.	Number	per cent.
Clwyd	451	13	1,528	45	251	7

West Glamorgan	—	—	89	30	—	—
WALES	820	5	6,319	42	499	3

Numbers relate to full-time and sandwich students following the required courses at higher and further education colleges, excluding tertiary colleges. They are shown as a percentage of the full-time and sandwich students on further education courses.

Languages

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment has been made of the effect of the compulsory teaching of Welsh at secondary level on the teaching of modern languages in those schools in non-native Welsh-speaking areas which have traditionally offered more than one modern language to GCSE level.

Sir Wyn Roberts: It is too early to gauge the effect of the introduction of Welsh in those schools in non-native speaking areas but I refer the hon. Gentleman to my right hon. Friend's announcement on 22 January about the structure of key stage 4 in the national curriculum in Wales. All pupils will be required to study both Welsh and a modern foreign language. The proposed structure will provide greater flexibility for parents and pupils to be offered a full choice of subjects including a second modern language.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will provide the detailed calculation of the transitional relief level for poll tax payers in the community of (a) Queensferry, (b) Shotton, (c) Connah's Quay, (d) Howarden, (e) Broughton and Bretton, (f) Higher Kinnerton and (g) Penyffordd.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 4 February at columns 22-24 for the method of calculation.

The figures for the communities requested are given in the following table:

Relief: 1990-91

Blood Products

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people with haemophilia in Wales who require factor VIII infusions are being treated with high purity monoclonal products; how many are being treated with the intermediate purity concentrates; and if he will break the figures down according to (a) product manufacturer, (b) the number of units of each product prescribed in the latest year for which data is available and (c) for each health authority.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: This information is not held centrally.

Lime Subsidy

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to reintroduce the lime subsidy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I have no plans to extend grant aid for routine applications of lime. Farmers with improvement plans under the Farm and Conservation Grant Regulations can obtain grant assistance towards the cost of liming land where this is part of a programme of reseeding and regeneration. In the less-favoured areas, lime treatment alone is eligible for grant where it can be demonstrated to be genuine restoration and not routine treatment.

Caravan Sites

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many caravan sites there are in (a) Ceredigion and (b) Dyfed; what the corresponding figures were for each of the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This information is not held centrally.

Small Businesses

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps are being taken in Wales by his Department to help small businesses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department continues to attach a high priority to the promotion of enterprise and to helping small businesses. General economic policies at a national level, national enterprise support policies and initiatives that are unique to Wales such as the Enterprise Wales scheme are all helping to make Wales a place where small businesses can flourish. In Wales the latest annual figures —most recently published in July 1990—show that by the end of 1989 the total number of businesses registered for VAT was nearly 85,200, an increase of 21 per cent. on the stock of businesses at the end of 1979.

Deeside Community Hospital

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he proposes the commissioning of the Deeside community hospital.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The time scale for commissioning the Deeside community hospital is a matter for the Clwyd health authority.

Mancot Community Hospital

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are his future plans for Mancot community hospital; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Plans for Mancot community hospital are a matter for Clwyd district health authority at this time.

Hospitals, Clwyd

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he proposes to visit (a) Dobshill hospital, Clwyd, (b) Meadowsleigh hospital, Clwyd, and (a) Broughton hospital, Clwyd; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: My right hon. Friend has no plans to visit these hospitals at present.

Waste Imports

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales in what quantities per nation annually European toxic waste has been imported by Wales for each year since 1979.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Information on the importation of waste by country of origin into the United Kingdom is available only for the period since the introduction of the Transfrontier Shipment of Hazardous Waste Regulations in October 1988. The information available in respect of imports of waste for disposal in Wales from European Community states for the years to 31 March 1989 and 1990 is shown in the table.

Imports of Hazardous Waste into Wales for the Continent of Europe

Country of Origin	Quantity (Tonnes) 1988-89	1989-90
Belgium	3,265	1,274
France	—	16
Federal Republic of Germany	—	331
Greece	—	5
Republic of Ireland	—	148
Italy	73	974
Luxembourg	—	17
Netherlands	351	281
Portugal	—	73
Spain	—	218

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what quantity of waste, in the last year for which figures are available, was imported for direct landfill within Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: No imports of hazardous waste for disposal at Welsh landfill sites have been notified under the Transfrontier Shipment of Hazardous Waste Regulations 1988.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of waste incinerated within Wales is imported; and what are the projected levels of such importation for the next decade.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Figures on waste incineration are not maintained centrally and no future projections are available.

NORTHERN IRELAND

District Councils

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total amount of general grant factor given to each Northern Ireland district council in 1980-81 and each subsequent year.

Mr. Needham: The information is set out in the table.

Grant Factors

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what were the de-rating and resources elements of the general grant factor for each of the past five financial years; and on what basis they were set.

Mr. Needham: The de-rating and resources elements of general exchequer grant for each of the past five financial years are set out in the following table.

The basis on which the grants are set is determined by a Local Government (General Grant) Order made in accordance with paragraph 3(1) of schedule 1 to the Local Government, &c. (Northern Ireland) Order 1972.

The derating and resources elements of the general exchequer grant from 1985-86 to 1989-90

Power Station Emissions

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how soon he expects energy developments in Northern Ireland will enable requirements of EC directives on sulphur dioxide emissions from power stations to be complied with; and whether he envisages the use of natural gas for generating electricity to reduce noxious emissions from power stations in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: I recently wrote to the chairman of Northern Ireland Electricity confirming that, if it is built as coal/oil-fired plant, the proposed phase II generating station at Kilroot would require flue gas desulphurisation. The letter also acknowledges that one of the alternative options, which envisages Kilroot phase II being completed as a natural gas fired plant, would satisfy the requirements of the EC large combustion plants directive. However, the technical and economic feasibility of using natural gas for power generation is still being assessed and no decision has yet been taken.

Hazelbank-Macedon Area

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the reservation of the Hazelbank-Macedon area in the Belfast urban area plan 2001 for landscape, amenity or recreation use provides protection to the area from office-housing development.

Mr. Needham: All planning applications are considered on their merits having regard to the development plan for the area and to any other material considerations. It is likely that any future planning application for office or housing development on this site would be the subject of a public local inquiry under the terms of article 22 of the Planning (NI) Order 1972.

Hotel Development

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many hotel development applications in Northern Ireland have been approved in lands restricted for landscape, amenity or recreation use.

Mr. Needham: Since 1987 planning permission for 21 such proposals has been granted by the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland.

Hazardous Waste, Maydown

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information regarding the proposal to site a hazardous waste incinerator at Dupont's Maydown complex has been furnishd to the DED's health and safety inspectorate; and what action the inspectorate is now undertaking.

Mr. Needham: Du Pont (UK) Limited has provided the Department of Economic Development's health and safety inspectorate with outline information concerning the possible siting of a toxic waste incinerator at Maydown, Co. Londonderry, and the inspectorate is continuing to monitor health and safety aspects of the company's proposals as further details become available.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 29 January, Official Report, column 470, what consultation the DOE environmental protection division have had regarding the proposed siting of a hazardous waste incinerator at Du Pont's Maydown complex; what information has been furnished to the division regarding the proposal; and what advice it has given or action it has taken on the matter to date.

Mr. Needham: The environmental protection division of the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland was advised by Du Pont (UK) Ltd of the proposal to establish a hazardous waste incinerator on its site at Maydown in October 1990. In December 1990 the company confirmed in writing that the evaluation of the project was under way. Officials from the Department's environmental protection division will be available for consultation with the company.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 29 January, Official Report, column 471, if he will make a statement indicating the scope and nature of informal discussion of the proposed hazardous waste incinerator at Maydown between officials of the United Kingdom and Irish Governments.

Mr. Needham: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the joint statement of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference which took place in Dublin on 31 January 1991.

Environmental Protection

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement outlining Government policy on balancing the needs of environmental protection and public safety and perceived job creation benefits indicating in which Northern Ireland Government Department the principal responsibility for assessing the balance rests.

Mr. Needham: Proposals for job creation must weigh and reconcile priorities in the public interest. These priorities include the protection of the environment. Responsibility for assessing the proper balance lies jointly with the Government Departments most immediately involved in such proposals, having regard to their relevant statutory functions in securing environmental protection and public safety. By virtue of its wide-ranging remit, the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland has a significant role in such joint assessments.

Waste Imports

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what proportion of waste incinerated within Northern Ireland is imported; and what are the projected levels of such importation for the next decade;

(2) in what quantities per nation annually European toxic waste has been imported by Northern Ireland for each year since 1979;

(3) what quantity of waste, in the last year for which figures are available, was imported for direct landfill within Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: None.

HEALTH

Health Services, Kent

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, for each parliamentary constituency in Kent what percentage of the population are local authority tenants according to the 1981 census.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is shown in the table:

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for each health authority covering the Kent area, which hospitals have been granted permission to establish a national health service trust.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No hospitals in Kent have been given approval for national health service trust status to date.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, for each health authority covering the Kent area, which hospitals have indicated an interest in establishing a national health service trust.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information requested is as follows:

Bexley district health authority
Bexley Acute and Community Services
Bexley Mental Health and Mental Handicap Services

Dartford and Gravesham district health authority
Dartford and Gravesham Acute Unit
Dartford and Gravesham Priority Services Unit

Census Statistics

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, for each parliamentary constituency in Kent, (1) what percentage of the population are (a) Asian and (b) black according to the 1981 census;

(2) what percentage of the population are (a) Asian and (b) black according to the latest information updated since the 1981 census.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not available. There was no question on ethnic group in the 1981 census.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, for each parliamentary constituency in Kent, what percentage of the population are owner occupiers according to the 1981 census.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is shown in the table:

Over Hospital

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will seek a report from Gloucester health authority regarding the extent of consultation during the partial closure of Over hospital.

Mr. Dorrell: The Community Health Council Regulations 1985, as amended, provide that a health authority need not consult on any variation of service if the authority

"is satisfied that, in the interest of the health service, a decision has to be taken without allowing time for consultation. In this circumstance the district health authority shall immediately notify the community health council of the decision".

This was the case in the partial closure of Over hospital, which was both urgent and temporary. The community health council was notified immediately of Gloucester district health authority's decision.

I understand that if Gloucester health authority decides to make this temporary closure permanent, it will consult.

Laboratory Services

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what statutory provisions apply to the contracting out of laboratory services by regional and district health authorities; if he is required to approve the terms of such contracts; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Under section 23 of the National Health Service Act 1977, and regulations made under that Act, regional and district health authorities exercising the Secretary of State's functions have the power to arrange for non-NHS bodies to provide services under that Act. The Secretary of State's approval of the terms of contracts is not required as the health authorities concerned would be acting on his behalf in arranging such contracts. Key issues for health authorities to take into account are the need for appropriate involvement of the individuals and groups concerned and the achievement of cost-effectiveness.

Mental Illness

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total number of readmissions to mental illness hospitals and units in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Dorrell: The table provides the numbers of admissions to national health service mental illness hospitals and hospital units where these admissions are known not to be a first admission to a national health service psychiatric hospital or hospital unit. The figures relate to admissions, and not individuals, since a person may be readmitted more than once during a year.

Reliable centrally collected figures by admission status for years 1987-88, 1988-89 and 1989-90 are not yet available. When figures are available they will not be directly comparable with earlier data.

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the mental illness hospitals planned for closure by 1996 by the health authorities concerned with the total number of beds in each and the number of beds currently occupied by patients.

Mr. Dorrell: The tables show mental handicap and mental illness hospitals planned for closure over the next five years and the district health authority in which each hospital is situated. The other information requested is not held centrally.

[1] With some facilities remaining on site.

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to publish comprehensive statistics about mentally ill hospital patients comparable to those in the DHSS statistical bulletins which ceased in 1986.

Mr. Dorrell: The Körner recommendations on health services information were implemented for each financial year, commencing from 1 April 1987. These recommendations involved several definitional changes to information collected by the national health service and some statistics comparable with those previously published are no longer available from central returns. Some information on mental illness is contained in the forthcoming booklet, "Hospital Episode System—Summary Tables for England —1987/88"—a copy of which will be placed in the Library. Further estimates for activity within the specialties of mental illness and mental handicap will be published in a bulletin later in 1991.

GP Services

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the level of achievement of the targets set for childhood immunisation and cervical screening for each area of general practice as defined by the Jarman index.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information is not available in the form requested. For information on the proportion of doctors receiving a target payment in each family health services authority I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) on 11 February at columns 351-56.

Physically Disabled People

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his policy on unaided access for physically disabled people to NHS facilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: Health authorities are required to comply with building regulations which contain requirements in respect of access for disabled people. From 1 April this year, building regulations will be legally enforceable on the NHS. In 1989, the Department published guidance on designing hospital facilities to meet the needs of disabled people which the NHS is encouraged to use and which exceeds the requirements of building regulations.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to increase unaided access to NHS facilities for physically disabled people.

Mr. Dorrell: The national health service will be legally bound by the new standards in respect of access for disabled people which are soon to be introduced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will obtain for his departmental library a copy of the Royal College of Physicians' report on health services for adults with physical disabilities.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department has received copies of the report and a copy will be placed in the Library. We welcome it as a timely contribution to the process of improving services for disabled people. It gives a clear picture of the present situation and will be a considerable help to those at all levels in the National Health Service who are concerned with the planning and operation of these services.

Disabled Young People

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what action he is taking to ensure that all district health authorities prepare and enforce formal arrangements for the transfer of disabled young people from paediatric to other consultants; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what information he has on the number of district health authorities that have prepared and enforced formal arrangements for the transfer of disabled young people from paediatric to other consultants.

Mr. Dorrell: In 1988 health authorities were asked to ensure appropriate planning for disabled young people on moving from child to adult health services. The need to ensure continuity in the supervision of their health care will also be underlined in guidance currently being prepared on the welfare of children and young people in hospital. The available information is contained in the Royal College of Physicians' report on health services for adults with physical disabilities.

GP Centre, Cheam

Sir Neil Macfarlane: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will meet Merton, Sutton and Wandsworth family practitioners' officials to review the funding arrangements for the new general practitioner centre in Malden road, Cheam; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: General medical practitioners, as independent contractors, are responsible for providing their own practice premises. From 1 April 1990 family health services authorities have been allocated cash-limited funds with which to finance improvements to GPs' practice premises under the cost rent and improvement grant schemes.

It is for Merton, Sutton and Wandsworth family health services authority to administer its allocations on the basis of best value for money, taking into account local needs and priorities. The hon. Member may wish to write to Mr. J. Speirs, the chairman of Merton, Sutton and Wandsworth family health services authority regarding the funding arrangements for the general practitioner centre in Malden road, Cheam.

Kidney Machines

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the cost of providing a dialysis unit; what is the running cost; and how many would be required to provide dialysis for all persons judged to be in need of it.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not collected centrally. The planning and provision of renal services is a matter for health authorities to decide, taking into account local needs and priorities.

St. Paul's Eye Hospital

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether St. Paul's Eye hospital in Liverpool has been put on the market for sale.

Mr. Dorrell: No.

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the future of St. Paul's eye hospital in Liverpool is currently the subject of consultation.

Mr. Dorrell: Yes. Liverpool health authority issued proposals for the closure of St. Paul's eye hospital on 21 November 1990 and invited comments by 22 January. The closing date for comments has now been extended to 19 February.

Training

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he received the application for funding of the Project 2000 training programme submitted on behalf of the Thames College of Health Care Studies; and when he expects to give his decision.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Project 2000 submission from South East Thames regional health authority, identifying Thames college of health care studies as the region's first choice for funding in 1991-92, was received on 25 January 1991. This submission, with the others which have been received, is being referred for consideration to the Project 2000 implementation group. Decisions on funding will be taken in the light of the implementation group's recommendations and will be announced as soon as possible.

Wheelchairs

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether his Department has now approved a particular design for a powered wheelchair for the use of patients in hospital or suffering disability.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department provides an evaluation service to assist NHS prescribers, rather than approve wheelchairs for health service use, as such.

Chemotherapy

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will ensure that where use of the drug Ondansetron is judged clinically to be of help to patients receiving chemotherapy sufficient funding is available to enable it to be prescribed.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Ondansetron is available for prescription by doctors throughout the national health service for the prevention of nausea and vomiting in patients undergoing chemotherapy and/or radiotherapy for cancer.

It is for the individual doctor to decide whether to prescribe Ondansetron, or indeed any drug, in a given set of circumstances. In many districts drug and therapeutic committees have been set up to secure the agreement and commitment of clinicians to an efficacious and economical system of drug usage and have drawn up formularies of preferred treatments. It is for health authorities to determine what financial allocation should be made available to any particular area of clinical care, including the provision of drugs.

Disability Working Allowance

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are his calculations of the additional costs that may be incurred through entitlement to (a) free prescriptions, (b) free dental treatment, (c) travelling costs to hospitals and (d) vouchers for glasses for those people in receipt of disability working allowance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 8 February 1991]: Disability working allowance does not exempt claimants from normal NHS charges unless they are exempt for other reasons—for example, a qualifying medical condition—or are entitled to full or partial remission under the NHS low income scheme.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Government Finance

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of the percentage of the population yet to pay their 1990 poll tax (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) in Nottingham; and what additional cost is necessary per poll tax payer to make good the deficit.

Mr. Key: My Department has estimated, based on returns from three quarters of all authorities, that in England, no payment had been made by 31 December by 11 per cent. of persons with a liability in respect of a personal community charge. In Nottingham the figure is 23 per cent.

Comparable figures for Scotland and Wales are a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for Scotland and the Secretary of State for Wales.

It is too early to say what charges payable in 1990-91 will prove to be uncollectable. The effect on chargepayers in future years will be minimised if authorities use all the means at their disposal to ensure that charges are paid in full.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the lowest poll tax charge in England; and what would be the total increase in central Government expenditure required to reduce all charges to this level.

Mr. Key: The lowest average community charge in England in 1990-91 was £150, in the London borough of Wandsworth. Assuming that local authorities do not change their budgets, and making no allowance for the reductions in community charge benefit grant and transitional relief grant that would result, central Government grants would need to increase by £7 billion in order for all authorities to set a charge of £150.

Public Transport

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment by how much the standard spending assessment for 1991-92 of London boroughs and the City of London has been reduced to reflect the fact that they do not provide support for public transport; what that figure is per adult; and if he will give the equivalent figures for 1990-91.

Mr. Key: The total 1991-92 standard spending assessment for London boroughs and the City has been reduced by about £160 million, equivalent to £31·40p per adult, to reflect the fact that they do not provide support for public transport. The equivalent figures for 1990-91 are £121 million and £24·01p per adult.

Crown Suppliers

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how much public money has been paid to the unsuccessful Crown Suppliers contract furnishings management buy-out team;

(2) what is the total amount of public money paid to the Crown Suppliers contract furnishing division buy-out team.

Mr. Yeo: A total of £76,980, in support of their professional advisers' fees.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what improprieties by the Crown Suppliers main board members have been indicated from internal departmental investigations over the last three years.

Mr. Yeo: Irregularities in respect of travel claims, acceptance of hospitality and the appointment of consultants; only one case was sufficiently serious to justify disciplinary action.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many performance pay bonuses have been awarded to the Crown Suppliers board in the period 1 January 1990 to 1 January 1991; and what was the total cost of those bonuses.

Mr. Yeo: Two, at a cost of £1,357·87.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total estimated cost of closing the Crown Suppliers contract furnishings division.

Mr. Yeo: At this stage it is too early to provide a firm estimate. The costs incurred to date are about £6·3 million.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place all those Property Services Agency internal audit reports on Crown Suppliers purchasing practice which have been produced since 1989 in the Library.

Mr. Yeo: It would be inappropriate to make internal audit reports generally available; such reports are, however, made available to the National Audit Office and used by the Comptroller and Audit General to inform his examination of the Department's work.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the total cost from 1984 to date of the Government's proposed privatisation of the Crown Suppliers.

Mr. Yeo: Since 3 February 1988 when the privatisation decision was announced, the cost of the Government's advisers' fees; of support for management buy-out teams' advisers' fees; and of the unit set up to oversee the privatisation, has amounted to £1·3 million.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total cost of settled claims to date which have directly arisen from the closure of the contracts furnishing division of the Crown Suppliers.

Mr. Yeo: A total of £408,670·36.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the future of the Crown Suppliers vehicle hire and maintenance division.

Mr. Yeo: An announcement will be made as soon as possible.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total cost to date of the design, installation and maintenance of the Crown Suppliers UNISYS system.

Mr. Yeo: The total cost between April 1988 and December 1990 of the design, installation and maintenance of the current Crown Suppliers UNISYS computer system was £9·78 million.

Housing, Kent

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what were the figures for homelessness for each parliamentary constituency in Kent in (a) 1979 and (b) 1989;

(2) if he will list the local authority housing departments which cover each parliamentary constituency in Kent.

(3) how many council houses have been bought in each parliamentary constituency in Kent since 1979;

(4) what were the figures for homelessness for each local authority housing department in the Kent area in (a) 1979 and (b) 1989;

(5) how many council houses have been bought in each housing authority in Kent since 1979.

Mr. Yeo: The table gives each parliamentary constituency in Kent together with their respective local authority housing department(s). In all but four constituencies, the constituency consists of part of one or more local authority areas.

Constituency	Local authority(ies)
Ashford	Ashford

Local authorities report the number of households accepted and found accommodation under the homelessness provisions of the Housing (Homeless Persons) Act 1977 and the Housing Act 1985. Annual figures for each local authority in Kent are given in "Local Housing Statistics"; the figures for 1979 are in table 14 of edition No. 54 and the figures for 1989 are in table 9(b) of edition No. 94

A table showing the available information on sales for each English local authority for each financial year since 1986-87 and with a cumulative total to September 1990 was recently placed in the Library—Official Report, 30 January 1991, column 542.

Late returns from Canterbury, Maidstone, Rochester upon Medway and Shepway revise the totals shown in the table as follows:

[1] Incomplete numbers of sales.

Of the 14 local housing authorities in Kent three have transferred their remaining stock to a housing association —Sevenoaks—March 1989, Swale—March 1990, Tonbridge and Malling—January 1991. Rochester upon Medway transferred its remaining stock to a private company in July 1990.

It is not possible to give the homelessness acceptance figures or the numbers of sales for all the parliamentary constituencies in Kent. These statistics are available only by local authority area.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what was the 1990 capital allocation to each local authority housing department covering the Kent area;

(2) what was the 1990 housing investment programme capital bid by each local authority housing authority department covering the Kent area.

Mr. Yeo: A table listing Housing Investment Programme allocations for 1991-92 for each local authority was placed in the Library on 13 December 1990. Local authorities' proposals for gross capital expenditure in 1991-92 were as follows:

	£ thousands
Ashford	9,949
Canterbury	11,715
Dartford	5,218
Dover	5,819
Gillingham	8,118
Gravesham	7,094
Maidstone	14,405
Rochester upon Medway	10,494
Sevenoaks	8,773
Shepway	5,093
Swale	11,547
Thanet	4,899
Tonbridge and Malling	3,900
Tunbridge Wells	4,516

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) according to information submitted to support 1990's capital allocation bids under the housing investment programme, what was the number of unfit properties in each local authority in Kent;

(2) according to information submitted to support 1990's capital allocation bids under the housing investment programme, what was the number of (a) unfit housing association properties, (b) unfit public sector properties and (c) unfit private sector properties within the area of each local authority housing department in Kent.

Mr. Yeo: Local authorities report the number of unfit dwellings in their own stock, and estimates of those owned by housing associations, other public sector bodies and in the private sector, in their annual housing investment programme returns—HIP1. The available figures for 1 April 1990 appear in "1990 HIP1 All Items Print", columns A31, A32, A33, and A34 respectively; a copy of which is in the Library.

MOD Quality Assurance Unit

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what expenditure has been incurred by the Teesside development corporation in preparation for the promised move of the MOD quality assurance unit to Preston farm, Stockton.

Mr. Key: Teesside development corporation has incurred expenditure totalling £2·47 million, including land acquisition and site preparation costs, on the site earmarked for the relocation of the MOD quality assurance organisation.

Structure Plans

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what economic factors he takes into account when approving structure plans.

Sir George Young: Local planning authorities are required to base their structure plans on an appreciation of the economic characteristics of their area, and the effect that any changes in them are likely to have on the development of their area and the planning of such development. They also take account of national and regional economic policies and the resources likely to be available for carrying out their structure plan proposals. The Secretary of State similarly takes these matters into account in his approval of structure plan proposals.

Vipera Berus

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he proposes to extend full protection to vipera berus; and if he will make a statement on any other amendments he proposes to seek to make to the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 in respect of species protection.

Mr. Baldry: Following advice from the Nature Conservancy Council, my hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Environment and the Countryside announced on 3 January that the Government had decided to introduce new protective measures for three species, including vipera berus, the adder. I have arranged for a copy of the news release to be placed in the Library of the House.

The necessary instrument to give effect to these changes will be laid before Parliament shortly.

Staff Negotiations

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department intends issuing a statement or circular on the implementation of section 12 of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989; and what communications he has received concerning the problems of implementing section 12.

Mr. Key: My Department has no plans to issue any general guidance on section 12 of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989, which requires local authorities to avoid having their interests in negotiations with their staff on pay and conditions of service represented by councillors who are themselves local council employees or officers of trade unions representing local authority employees. My Department has received from a number of local authorities queries about the application of the section and other representations.

Humberside County Council

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects the recommendations of the Local Government Boundary Commission on the future of Humberside county council to be implemented.

Mr. Key: The Local Government Boundary Commission for England has, as yet, made no recommendations as a result of its further review of the county of Humberside. It is, therefore, premature to speculate on the implementation of any such recommendations.

Toxic Waste

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has concerning the whereabouts and possible destination of the Karin B waste.

Mr. Trippier: I understand that Rechem has accepted some of this waste for disposal at its high temperature incinerators at Pontypool in Torfaen district and Fawley in Hampshire and has complied with the Transfrontier Shipment of Hazardous Waste Regulations 1988.

Housing, Tandridge

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council homes are owned by Tandridge district council, east Surrey; and what percentage is vacant.

Sir George Young: The number of council-owned dwellings reported by Tandridge district council in its April 1990 housing investment programme return—HIP1—was 3,567, of which some 2 per cent. or, 72, were vacant.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the change in the level of registered homeless persons in Tandridge district, east Surrey, in the last 12 months.

Sir George Young: Local authorities report each quarter the number of households for which they accepted responsibility to secure accommodation under the homelessness provisions of the Housing Act 1985.

There has been no significant change in the number of households accepted as homeless by Tandridge district council over the 12 months to September 1990.

The latest reported figures for individual local authorities, including those for Tandridge district, appear in a table of "Households found accommodation under the homelessness provisions of the 1985 Housing Act: England. Results for the third quarter 1990. Supplementary Tables".

Copies of this document and those for previous quarters are in the Library.

Council House Sales

Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to when Mrs. Jean Hopwood of 12a Therapia road, SE22, may expect completion of the purchase of her home from the London borough of Southwark under the right-to-buy scheme.

Mr. Yeo: I understand that this case has been subject to delay and involves some unresolved negotiations. I trust that Southwark council will do everything that it can to enable satisfactory completion of the sale. The Government have introduced measures which enable tenants to seek financial redress in cases where local authorities do not perform within statutory time limits. These are available, if appropriate, in this case.

Nuclear Fuel

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department will participate in, or be represented at, the conference on the management of spent nuclear fuel to be held in London, 29-30 April.

Mr. Trippier: My Department will not be represented at the conference on the management of spent nuclear fuel on 29 and 30 April.

Environment Conferences

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department will participate in the conference on paying for water, effluent and pollution control 1991-92, to be held in London on 13 February.

Mr. Trippier: No, but I understand that the Office of Water Services is providing one of the speakers.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has been invited to participate in the conference, "What on Earth is to be Done?", to be held in London on 19 March.

Mr. Trippier: My right hon. Friend has accepted an invitation to give the opening speech at this conference.

Water Mains

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to bring forward legislation requiring water authorities to contribute to the costs of highway reconstruction following water main bursts.

Mr. Freeman: I have been asked to reply.

The answer is yes. The Public Utilities Street Works Act 1950 contains provisions on the liability of water authorities and other undertakers to highway authorities for damage caused to the property of the highway authority. A distinction is drawn between damage caused as a consequence of the exercise of an undertaker's statutory powers and that caused as a consequence of the carrying out of a statutory duty. The law as it stands is unsatisfactory and has led to a number of disputes over the apportionment of the costs of repairing the road following a burst main. The New Roads and Street Works Bill now before Parliament would replace the 1950 Act provision with a straightforward duty on undertakers to compensate the highway authority in respect of any damage or loss suffered by the authority as a result of the execution of street works or an event such as a burst main.

Housing Associations

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of housing association build is built to (a) wheelchair standard and (b) mobility standard.

Mr. Yeo [pursuant to his reply, 30 January 1991 c. 538]: Approximately 3 per cent. of housing association completions of new dwellings in England reported to my Department in the year ending September 1990 were dwellings for the chronically sick and disabled, built to mobility standards. A further 0·5 per cent. were dwellings for the chronically sick and disabled built to wheelchair standards.

Community Charge

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has received any representations about the exercise of his community charge-capping powers in relation to the proposed 1991-92 budget for West Yorkshire police authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key [holding answer 8 February 1991]: We have received a number of representations from and on behalf of the West Yorkshire police authority about our intentions for charge capping for 1991-92, including those made when I met a delegation from the authority on 29 November 1990.

As my right hon. Friend told the House on 29 January, we stand firmly by these intentions which are, however, necessarily provisional, since, under the statute, capping decisions cannot be made until authorities have set their budgets. It is now for each authority to set its budget having regard to all relevant considerations including its statutory duties, the approved level of police manpower, our intended capping criteria, the need as appropriate for expenditure restraint, and the scope for greater efficiency.

Solvent

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what amount of used solvent is imported to the United Kingdom; and what proportion of this is (a) originally exported from the United Kingdom and (b) imported to the manufacturer for disposal.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 11 February 1991]: The import of used solvent which is special waste is subject to the Control of Pollution (Special Waste) Regulations 1980. Records of shipments made under these regulations are maintained by the disposal authorities concerned and not by the Department. The producer of the waste is identified but not the manufacturer of the original solvent.

Waste Recycling

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to ensure that importation of waste substances for recycling results in the recycling of all the materials imported.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 11 February 1991]: Under the Transfrontier Shipment of Hazardous Waste Regulations 1988 which implement European Community directive 84/631 as amended on transfrontier shipments, hazardous waste that is imported for recycling must be subject to a contract between the producer of the waste and the recycler to the effect that the waste will be recycled. It is proposed in the draft Council regulation on the supervision and control of shipments of waste within, into and out of the European Community to extend the use of contracts binding the producer and the recycler to all imports of waste, except for certain categories of waste —to be determined—which are completely innocuous.

Hazardous and Toxic Waste

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to define in legislation the terms hazardous waste and toxic waste.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 11 February 1991]: Hazardous waste and toxic waste are equated in British legislation to special waste. Special waste is defined in the Control of Pollution (Special Waste) Regulations 1980. These regulations will be revised in due course to reflect the definition of hazardous waste which will be made under the new EC directive on hazardous waste agreed at the Environment Council on 21 December 1990.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Grant-maintained Schools

13. Mrs. Currie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on progress on grant-maintained schools.

15. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many applications he has received from schools for grant-maintained status; and if he will make a statement.

18. Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the progress of grant-maintained status awarded to schools.

Mr. Eggar: A total of 93 schools have now submitted proposals to my right hon. and learned Friend, and he is awaiting a further 18 proposals following ballots in favour. Of the 93 applications, 60 have been approved, 12 rejected and 21 have yet to be decided.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will outline the advantages to pupils, parents and teachers of a school opting for grant-maintained status and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: GM schools have many advantages for pupils, parents and teachers. The schools are run by local people; they can make their own decisions about how to make the best use of resources, including a part of LEA expenditure on centrally provided services; their governors and heads have greater autonomy than is provided by local management of schools; and they are proving popular with parents.

Postgraduate Research

14. Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the current numbers in Scottish universities undertaking post-graduate research in physics, chemistry and mathematics; and what were the comparable figures for 1990, 1989 and 1988.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The numbers of postgraduate students at Scottish universities in physics, chemistry and mathematics were 317, 422 and 135 respectively in the academic year 1989-90. The comparable figures for 1988-89 were 350, 431 and 103. Figures are not yet available for the current academic year.

RE Teachers

16. Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many qualified religious education teachers are currently employed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: In 1988 three were approximately 13,300 full-time teachers in maintained secondary schools in England with a qualification in religious education, of whom 6,400 were teaching the subject.

Cricket Coaching

17. Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the coaching of cricket in schools.

Mr. Atkins: Many schools offer their pupils the opportunity to take part in cricket and I am keen that schools continue to teach the game. PE including sport is a compulsory part of the school curriculum. In addition, the Sports Council provides funding to help develop sports coaching and facilities, and will soon be publishing a review of coaching and coach education.

Paperwork

19. Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to reduce the amount of paperwork in schools as a result of the introduction of the national curriculum.

Mr. Eggar: The Government have already acted to cut schools' paperwork. I recently announced that we had agreed with the National Curriculum Council and the School Examinations and Assessment Council to restrict the amount of non-essential guidance and other material sent to schools. We hope that other bodies, including LEAs' will follow our example.

Scientific Research

20. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last met the chairman of the Science and Engineering Research Council to discuss the funding of scientific research; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. and learned Friend occasionally meets the chairman of the Science and Engineering Research Council. I have met Sir Mark Richmond twice recently when the funding of scientific research was among the issues discussed.

Education Spending

21. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science by what percentage the education component of standard spending assessment is due to rise between 1990-91 and 1991-92; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: The education components of standard spending assessments in England will rise by an average of 16 per cent. between 1990-91 and 1991-92. This substantial increase, far in excess of the likely rate of inflation, should enable all authorities to deliver education services of a high quality if they manage their affairs well.

History

22. Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received following the publication of his report about history in the national curriculum.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Barnsley, Central (Mr. Illsey).

Primary Schools

23. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many four-year-old children were admitted to primary schools in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Eggar: The total number of four-year-olds admitted to primary classes in maintained schools in England in September 1989 and January 1990 was 441,100. For the previous year the figure was 410,900.

Nursery Education

24. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what action he proposes to take in respect of the part of his "Starting with Quality" report on under-fives dealing with the number of places in nursery education.

26. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proposals he has to increase the number of places in nursery education.

Mr. Eggar: The committee of inquiry urged increases in overall provision for the under-fives—including childcare—rather than in nursery education specifically. It is for local authorities to decide how far this can be given priority. Much is being done: the numbers of under-fives in maintained schools went up by 29,000 between 1989 and 1990.

Teachers' Pay

25. Mr. Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the latest figures for the real increase in teachers' pay since 1979.

Mr. Eggar: Teachers' average salaries have increased by some 30 per cent. in real terms since 1979. When the IAC's latest recommendations are fully implemented it is likely that there will be a further real terms increase as inflation is likely to fall over the coming year.

Local Management of Schools

27. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the purpose of the local management of schools scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: The key aims of the local management of schools are to ensure that resources are allocated to schools in a fair and open way, based mainly on the number of pupils they have to educate; and that as much as is reasonably possible of local authorities' potential schools budget is delegated to schools, to manage as they see fit.

I expect the introduction of the local management of schools to benefit all schools. Many schools are already experiencing those benefits; many more will do so when formula funding and delegated management have been fully implemented in every local education authority.

Rural Schools

28. Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what policies exist to aid small rural schools.

Mr. Fallon: The Government's policies for promoting improvements in the education service through the implementation of the national curriculum, through the local management of schools, and through grants for education support and training, all take account of the needs of small rural schools.

Reading Standards

29. Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proposals he has to monitor reading standards in the national curriculum.

Mr. Eggar: The national curriculum will secure, for the first time, national information about standards in reading from age seven onwards. Once it is fully in place, all pupils will be required by law to be assessed in reading at the ages of seven, 11, 14 and 16; and aggregate statistics will be published.

Nursery Provision, Kent

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science where in rank order of nursery provision in England and Wales, Kent county council education authority stands.

Mr. Eggar: The table shows that in January 1990, Kent local education authority appeared 89th out of the 96 local education authorities in England in regard to the percentage of under-fives attending maintained nursery school and nursery classes.

Similar data for Wales is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Nurseries

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what percentage of three and four-year-olds in Kent county council education authority area have places in (a) nursery schools, (b) nursery classes and (c) infant classes.

Mr. Eggar: The percentage of children under five attending maintained nursery schools, nursery classes and infant classes in primary schools in Kent local education authority in January 1990 was as follows:

	Percentage of Under Fives[1]
Nursery schools	0·2
Nursery classes	4·8
Infant classes	12·3

[1] The number of under fives as a percentage of the estimated population aged 3 and 4.

Nuclear Structure Facility, Daresbury

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to the number of postgraduate students attached to the nuclear structure facility at Daresbury.

Mr. Alan Howarth: There are 33 postgraduate students who spend part of their time at the nuclear structure facility at the SERC's Daresbury laboratory.

Research, Bristol

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many research contracts and agreements the United States Department of Defence currently has with Bristol universities and polytechnics; what is their total value, and if his Department has any involvement in the placing of those research contracts and agreements.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Such information is not collected centrally. The Department is not involved in these institutional matters.

Higher Education Fees

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to issue a directive prohibiting colleges of higher education from imposing top-up fees.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The setting of fees for degree and other courses is properly a matter for individual higher education institutions. Primary legislation, for which the Government have no plans, would be required to change this. Equally, the Government have no plans to change the arrangements whereby standard fees are met in full for students eligible for an award under the awards arrangements.

Nuclear Research

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to negotiate a higher basic country contribution to the European nuclear research centre.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The United Kingdom, in conjunction with other members, will continue to encourage CERN to increase the proportion of its budget financed from sources outside the member state contribution system. This could include further assistance, either in cash or in kind, from the two host states.

London Institute

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he has taken to ensure himself that the criteria used by the London institute for allocating money from the access fund is within the guidelines laid down by the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The conditions of payment of access funds set by my right hon. and learned Friend already require institutions to follow guidelines set by the funding councils. All institutions have been asked to account for their expenditure of access fund grant at the end of the academic year.

History and Geography

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received about the teaching of history and geography and the attainment targets stipulated in the national curriculum; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The representations received in response to the proposals of the then Secretary of State for attainment targets and programmes of study in geography and history were the subject of consultation reports published recently by the National Curriculum Council. On 14 January my right hon. and learned Friend published draft statutory orders and draft associated documents containing attainment targets and programmes of study in these two subjects, and invited comments and representations by 15 February.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether the teaching of history in schools is to be pursued with the intention of understanding contemporary issues; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by right hon. and learned Friend to my hon. Friend the Member for Wyre Forest (Mr. Coombs) on 14 January 1991 at column 373-74 when he published a draft order and associated document setting out attainment targets and programmes of study for history in the national curriculum.

Advisory Board for the Research Councils

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has on ABRC's flexibility margin for 1991-92, 1992-93 and 1993-94.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The science budget for 1991-92 has been fully allocated. In its recent advice to my right hon. and learned Friend, the Advisory Board for the Research Councils recommended that sums of £39 million and £60 million, respectively, should remain unallocated in 1992-93 and 1993-94. He expects to receive further advice from the ABRC on the allocation of these sums in the spring.

Local Education Authorities

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list all local education authorities in England in rank order of expenditure per secondary pupil per year, starting with the higher spending authority, together with their position in the table of examination results for school leavers achieving grades A-C at GCSE in 1989 and 1990.

Mr. Fallon [pursuant to his reply 8 February 1991, columns. 257-60]: It appears that some of the information supplied was not published fully in the Official Report.

The correct answer should read as follows:

The following table gives the net institutional expenditure per secondary school pupil in the financial year 1988-89, and averaged examination results for three years 1986-87 to 1988-89. The purpose of averaging is to reduce sampling error within the derived percentages. Comparable information is not yet available for 1989-90.

Notes to table:

1. Net institutional expenditure includes the cost of salaries and wages, premises, and certain supplies and services. It does not include the cost of school meals, central administration, debt charges or revenue contributions to capital outlay.

2. The expenditure figures are based on LEA expenditure returns to DOE and pupil number returns to DES. N/A denotes that an expenditure return has not been received from an LEA.

3. The examination data are aggregated from the results of a sample survey for the academic years 1986-87, 1987-88 and 1988-89. The survey is based on a 10 per cent. sample of pupils in maintained and independent schools (excluding special schools) who have reached the minimum school leaving age. The percentages quoted do not reflect the achievements of pupils at O-level, CSE or GCSE after leaving school; nor their attainments in examinations leading to vocational or other qualifications at school or elsewhere. The data includes grades A-C at O-level and CSE grade 1.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Overseas Visits

Mr. Amos: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list the airline used, and the destination of each of the overseas visits undertaken by the House of Commons Home Affairs Committee for the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: Overseas visits undertaken by the Home Affairs Committee in the last 12 months and the airlines used are as follows:

HOUSE OF COMMONS COMMISSION

Director of Finance and Administration

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick upon Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, what is the process whereby the advertisement for a Director of Finance and Administration for the House of Commons, placed in The Economist of 26 January, was drafted.

Mr. Beith: Advertisements for the new post of Director of Finance and Administration were placed in the national media in late January by Korn/Ferry International, acting on the instructions of the implementation manager appointed by the House of Commons Commission.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Management Consultancies

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list each of the management consultancies operating in his Department, the title of the project, the finishing date and the cost (a) currently and (b) in 1990 and excluding any in (a).

Mr. Jack: Details of current studies and those undertaken since April 1990 are in the tables. The cost of individual studies is not given, as that could breach commercial confidentiality, but total expenditure on these studies in the financial year 1990-91 to date is £2·94 million.

Disability Working Allowance

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the numbers of people who would be eligible for the disability working allowance if the capital limit was set at (a) £16,000 and (b) £8,000 broken down in each case by whether tariff income is taken into account for capital over (i) £8,000, (ii) £5,000 and (iii) £3,000.

Mr. Scott: We have estimated that about 50,000 people will be entitled to disability working allowance at any one time. The intention is that there should be taken into account at a rate of £1 for each £250 of capital above £3,000. However, given the small numbers involved and the uncertainty about the characteristics of this group it is not possible to estimate with confidence how this estimate would be affected if a different capital rule was applied.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is his estimate of the total numbers of people who would be eligible for the disability allowance if the taper was set at (a) 50 per cent., (b) 40 per cent. or (c) 30 per cent.;

(2) what would be the additional net cost to the Department of reducing the taper applied in the disability working allowance from the illustrative rate of 70 per cent. to (a) 50 per cent., (b) 40 per cent. and (c) 30 per cent. broken down by (i) gross cost and (ii) offsetting savings in income-related benefits.

Mr. Scott: The effects of applying different tapers in disability working allowance cannot be predicted with confidence since the estimates include assumptions about behaviour changes and likely earnings levels among potential claimants who are not currently in work. Our best estimates are as follows:

	Gross cost £ million	Net cost[1] £ million	Caseload
(a) 50 per cent. taper	30	20	65,000
(b) 40 per cent. taper	50	30	75,000
(c) 30 per cent. taper	80	50	90,000

[1] This is the cost after deducting the savings in other benefits. These include savings from people moving off incapacity benefits and savings on income-related benefits which may be payable in addition to DWA.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the cost of raising the capital limit for the purposes of the disability working allowance from £8,000 to £16,000.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Exeter (Mr. Hannam) on 10 December 1990 at col. 303-4.

Benefits, Doncaster

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the latest figures for the Doncaster area as to how many people are receiving (a) income support, (b) family credit and (c) housing benefit; and what percentage of the Doncaster adult population this represents.

Miss Widdecombe: The latest available information is as follows:

	Number
Income support[1]	31,991
Family credit[2]	1,977
Housing benefit[3]	22,937

Notes:
[1] Data derived from 30 November 1990 count of cases in action, which include a number of cases where payment has ceased but other action is continuing.
[2] Number of families who, at the time their award was made, were living in the Doncaster area. Data does not include family credit awards made after 28 December 1990.
[3] Total number of people in receipt of housing benefit in the Doncaster borough council area in November 1990. The borough council boundary is not conterminous with the boundary of the area covered by the Department's local offices in Doncaster and Wath-on-Dearne.

Data are not available on the total adult population in Doncaster on the dates and for the precise geographical areas to which the above information relates.

Computerisation

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the frequency and nature of errors on the computer system used to calculate benefits at his Department's offices in the Doncaster area; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The Department's strategy for the computerisation of the social security payment system, which includes local offices in the Doncaster area, will be completed on time in July 1991. One of the aims of the strategy is to reduce the level of payment errors. Although information on specific types of errors are not currently available either locally or nationally, the majority relate to human error, rather than computer faults. The latest available information indicates that the national error rate for all types of income support payments stands at around 5·3 per cent. compared with 7·4 per cent. prior to computerisation. The error rate for payments of retirement pension averages 2 per cent.

Local Offices

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the posts, grade and functions of existing vacancies in each of his Department's offices in Nottingham.

Miss Widdecombe: On 28 January 1991, the four former offices in Nottingham located in Shakespeare street, David lane, Station street and Castle gate were restructured into two administrative units, namely West Nottinghamshire and East Nottinghamshire districts. There are no vacancies at the present time in either district.

Benefits

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proposals he has to review the division between benefits which are paid for out of the national insurance fund and those which are paid for out of taxation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: The Social Security Act 1990 made certain changes in the division between benefits which are paid for out of the national insurance fund and those which are paid for out of taxation. We have no current plans to review the division further.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many individuals in (a) England and Wales and (b) Scotland were receiving rate rebate/community charge benefit in 1987-88, 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 31 January 1991]: The figures for 1988-89, 1989-90 and the latest estimates, based on benefit caseload processed at 31 August 1990, for 1990-91 are in the table. The 1990-91 figures are likely to underestimate the current position, because some authorities still had a number of unprocessed claims at that time. The information requested for 1987-88 is not available.

thousands

	England and Wales	Scotland
Rate Rebates 1988-89	5,840	840
Rate Rebates and Community Charge Rebates in Scotland 1989-90	5,700	1,100
Community Charge Benefit 1990-91	7,940	970

Cold Weather Payments

Dr. Bray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list all the dates on which, at (a) Glasgow airport and (b) Edinburgh airport, the average mean daily temperature for seven consecutive days was equal to or below 0 deg Celsius, and thus triggered cold weather payments in the Glasgow-Strathclyde area and the Edinburgh area, respectively.

Mr. Scott: Edinburgh airport weather station has not triggered this winter, as at 5 February 1991.

Glasgow airport weather station has triggered twice. The average mean daily temperature for the week ending 16 January 1991 was −0·2 deg C and for the seven days preceding 4 February the temperature was −0·1 deg C.

Full details of average mean daily temperatures recorded at all the weather stations can be found in the Library.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) pursuant to his answer of 7 February on cold weather payments arrangements, what is the estimated extra cost of the amendments to the scheme per week; and for how long the revised arrangements will endure;

(2) pursuant to his answer of 7 February on cold weather payments, whether claimants will receive payments earlier under his revised scheme;

(3) pursuant to his answer of 7 February on cold weather payments arrangements, whether arising from the waiving of the seven-day qualifying rule claimants will be paid for part weeks and single days.

Mr. Scott: As my right hon. Friend, the Prime Minister said today, given the continuation of the widespread and exceptional severe weather, we are again waiving the seven-day qualifying period this week. As at last Thursday, the coming Thursday 14 February will be deemed to be the trigger day for all areas of the country which have not already triggered; and people in the appropriate group will be eligible for payment, at the new enhanced rate of £6, for the current seven days just as they will for the seven days up to last Thursday. We shall continue to monitor the situation carefully, and if the cold weather should continue to the same degree we shall take similar measures.

It will not be possible to give the cost of the changes to the scheme until it is known how many people have claimed. Claimants will, as before, receive payment as soon as possible after making a successful claim. All payments will relate to a seven-day period.

Income Support

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the number of people in receipt of mortgage interest payments under income support and who have had that payment stopped under the 52-week limit for those in hospital; how many of these people then returned home; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is not available.

Widows' Benefits

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in what circumstances a person's entitlement to a retirement pension or widow's benefit will be enhanced or reduced by the provisions of the Social Security (Widows Benefit and Retirement Pensions) Amendment Regulations 1990.

Miss Widdecombe: The regulations neither enhance nor reduce entitlement to retirement pension or widows benefit. They are essentially technical in nature and set out more clearly than the original regulations the entitlement conditions for reduced rate benefit where the contribution conditions are not fully satisfied.

Severely Disabled People

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated number of severely disabled people in employment, or self-employment, who require nursing or personal care to enable them to continue to work; what is the average number of hours of care required by each such person per week; and if he will give the average cost of such care.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is not available.

National Insurance Credits

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when his Department's office in Newcastle expects to give a ruling regarding national insurance credits in respect of Mr. M. J. D. of Birmingham, whose national insurance number is LT079153B; and if he will make a statement about the length of time taken to resolve this matter.

Mr. Jack: Resolution of this matter involved consultation between this Department and the Employment Services Agency. This has taken longer than expected but has now been concluded. We expect to be able to write to Mr. M. J. D. of Birmingham within the next week to confirm his credit position. Investigations are in hand to examine thoroughly the reasons for the delays in this case and I will write to the hon. Member about this.

SCOTLAND

Industrial Investment Fund

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what EC prohibitions exist with regard to the establishment of a Government funded Scottish industrial investment fund able to provide security-free loans, capital repayment holidays, lower than market rate interest rates, and special support for training.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Any proposal to establish a Government-funded organisation providing state aid to industry would require to comply with the provisions of articles 92 and 93 of the treaty of Rome, including the provisions in those articles relating to notification to, and approval by, the European Commission.

Salmon

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the recent scale of farmed salmon exports from Norway to the European Community and on its impact on the Scottish fish farming industry.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It is understood that Norway exported 72,000 tonnes of farmed salmon to the European Community in 1990. Production of Scottish farmed salmon in 1990 was 32,350 tonnes. I recognise the Scottish industry's concern at the current state of the market and the effect of Norwegian imports on it. The Norwegian Government have recently given renewed assurances of efforts by their industry to stabilise the market and on that basis the European Commission has proposed to close without remedy the anti-dumping case brought by Scottish and Irish producers. The Government are considering this proposal.

Soft Fruit Growers

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures he proposes to protect Scottish soft fruit growers from subsidised east European imports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: East European imports of semi-processed soft fruit have been the subject of continuing representations to the European Commission since the collapse of the informal price agreements with Poland and Yugoslavia last year. The Government took the lead in ensuring that the Commission reacted to market disruption by introducing safeguard action in the form of minimum import prices in July 1990. These prices were originally intended to last until 31 December. They have, however, been extended to 31 March 1991 as the Commission was unable to meet its commitment to negotiate new price agreements on the basis of the undertaking given when substantial concessions were given by the Community on the extension of the generalised system of preferences to certain East European countries.

The Government have also made clear their view that, if satisfactory price agreements are still not negotiated before the expiry of the current arrangements, provision should be made for the safeguard action to continue for at least nine months to allow adequate cover during the 1991 marketing season.

Community Charge

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table in the Official Report showing by region the number of £50 civil penalties imposed on persons failing to return poll tax registration forms; and if he will consider simplification of such forms and consider allowing local editions as in England.

Mr. Lang: Information on the number of civil penalties imposed for failure to return registration forms is not held centrally. We will be looking at the registration arrangements as part of our review of the community charge and this exercise will include a review of the forms if it is decided to retain existing procedures. Meanwhile there is no intention of moving away from the present arrangement in Scotland, whereby the format of the registration form is prescribed. There is, of course, nothing to prevent community charges registration officers inserting additional explanatory information along with the forms that are issued.

Mental Illness

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total number of patients receiving treatment for mental illness in Scottish hospitals in 1990.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information for 1990 is not yet available. The total number of patients who were resident in mental illness and psychiatric units at 31 December 1989 was 13,599. The number of in-patient discharges in 1989 was 29,576. For the year ended 31 March 1990 Scottish hospitals dealt with 3,651 day case attendances as well as treating 36,448 new out-patients.

A1

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the locations and duration of temporary traffic light controls on the Scottish section of the A1 trunk road during the last year, giving the reason for each case.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Temporary traffic light controls on the A1 in Scotland (approximately 90 m long) during 1990 were as follows:

	2 days May	Road patching
	1 day November	Installation of traffic counters

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many exceptionally large or heavy loads, requiring notification or escort by the police or local authority, were conveyed on the Scottish section of the A1 trunk road in each of the last 12 months.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information on the differing types of exceptionally wide or heavy loads moving annually on the Scottish road network is not held on a centralised data base. Police and bridge authorities are notified in respect of their individual interest. There are many thousands of such notifications per annum on the road network and records for the A1 could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The Lothian and Borders police however estimate that the number of exceptional loads on the A1 requiring accompaniment are in the region of 200 per annum.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the road juctions with the A1 trunk road in Scotland which are being considered for safety improvement measures.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The first interim report of the A1 steering group has identified measures which could be taken at Coveyheugh junction, Greenwood junction, Knowes Farm Road junction, Huntington Road junction and at Gladsmuir.

The Scottish Office Environment Department is discussing these measures with Borders and Lothian regional councils, my agents for maintaining the A1 trunk road in Scotland, with a view to the early implementation. The measures proposed involve the improvement of signing and road markings.

Age Concern

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if his Department issues any guidelines to social work departments about consulting committees and local communities before deciding to close local Age Concern organisations.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: We have not issued any guidance since decisions on the support of local projects are for authorities themselves to determine.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the amount of central Government support given to Govan Age Concern since its inception.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Central Government grants under the urban programme totalling £183,274 have been paid to Strathclyde regional council in respect of approved expenditure by the Govan Age Concern project since its inception.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if his Department was informed of, or consulted about, the intended closure of Govan Age Concern.

Mr. Allan Stewart: No.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if his Department has ever received and evaluated reports on the work, objectives and achievements of Govan Age Concern.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Yes.

Alzheimer's Disease

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met representatives of Alzheimers' Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. Friend has not met representatives of Alzheimers' Scotland and has not received any request for a meeting.

Health Clinic, Johnstone

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the proposed commencement, termination and opening dates for the new health clinic at Ludovic square, Johnstone; and what range of services will be provided at the clinic.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Work started on site on 14 January 1991 and building work is expected to be completed by the spring of next year. Commissioning of the building will take some six to eight weeks thereafter and I anticipate that the new clinic will therefore be opened in summer 1992.

It is planned to provide the services currently offered in the existing accommodation including chiropody, dental and mothercraft but these may be augmented as the result of an update of a user survey to be carried out prior to the opening of the new centre.

Accommodation for one local GP will be provided and evening clinics may be introduced to meet local needs.

Sports and Recreation

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps urgently to collect information regarding the number of playfields, stadia and recreation grounds in Scotland (a) available to schools and (b) available to the public in general.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I am aware that the Secretary of State for Education and Science plans to make available to the Sports Council (Great Britain) in 1991-92 additional resources to enable the council, the Central Council of Physical Recreation and the National Playing Fields Association to set up a register of recreational land in England. I have advised the director of the National Playing Fields Association that if this register proves to be worthwhile in England, the Government will consider whether a similar register should be created in Scotland.

Paisley Town Centre

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received about the planning proposal currently before him for the pedestrianisation of Paisley town centre; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Paisley town centre steering group has inquired when a decision would be made on my right hon. Friend's consent to the making of this order and my hon. Friend, the Minister for Industry and Local Government discussed the matter with the hon. Member and the hon. Member for Paisley, North (Mrs. Adams). Explanation of the reasons for rejecting the objections lodged against the scheme have been sought from Strathclyde regional council. Subject to the provision of satisfactory explanation there is no reason why prompt progress should not be made with the consideration of the order.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what funding has been allocated to the Scottish Council for Independent Schools for an advertising campaign to advise parents of the assisted places scheme.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: None. The recent advertising campaign to promote awareness of the assisted places scheme was funded directly by the Scottish Office.

Milk Production

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many farms produce milk and how many of these farms produce less than 200,000 litres per annum.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In June 1990 there were 3,143 farm units in Scotland producing milk and 2,665 registered producers. Approximately 700 producers hold a quota of less than 200,000 litres.

Imported Waste

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what proportion of waste incinerated within Scotland is imported; and what are projected levels of such importation for the next decade;

(2) in what quantities per nation annually European toxic waste has been imported by Scotland for each year since 1979;

(3) what quantity of waste, in the last year for which figures are available, was imported for direct landfill within Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Very little, if any, of the waste incinerated in Scotland is imported. On the basis of current information it seems unlikely that this will change significantly in the next decade.

Imports from Europe of hazardous waste, as defined in the Transfrontier Shipment of Hazardous Waste Regulations 1988, were 453 tonnes in 1988 and 480 tonnes in 1989. Virtually all of this waste was imported from Eire for recycling. There have been no reports of hazardous waste under the regulations being imported for direct landfill.

Forestry

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total amount of planting undertaken by the private sector and supported by the woodland grant scheme in 1990 and for each conservancy, indicating in each case the proportion of broadleaves and conifer.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The areas of new planting grant-aided under the woodland grant scheme in the year ended 31 March 1990, the latest date for which figures are available, were as follows:

Conservancy	Conifers hectares	Broadleaves hectares	Total hectares
North England	155	242	397
East England	31	339	370
West England	75	357	432
Wales	147	120	267
North Scotland	2,515	906	3,421
Mid Scotland	1,202	288	1,490
South Scotland	1,771	237	2,008
Great Britain	5,896	2,489	8,385

These figures do not include new planting grant-aided under other Forestry Commission schemes or the farm woodland scheme.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was (a) the total amount of planting undertaken by the Forestry Commission in 1990 in each conservancy and (b) the respective amounts of broadleaf and conifer.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The areas of new planting undertaken by the Forestry Commission in the year ended 31 March 1990, the latest date for which figures are available, were as follows:

Conservancy	Conifers hectares	Broadleaves hectares	Total hectares
North England	170	25	195
East England	Nil	Nil	Nil
West England	1	2	3

Conservancy	Conifers hectares	Broadleaves hectares	Total hectares
Wales	86	10	96
North Scotland	1,749	99	1,848
Mid Scotland	900	66	966
South Scotland	914	59	973
Great Britain	3,820	261	4,081

Smoked Salmon

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the provisions which apply to the posting of smoked salmon (a) in Scotland to European destinations and (b) from Europe to destinations in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 11 February 1991]: Mail for European destinations is accepted provided that it is appropriately packed with a completed customs declaration form and is in compliance with any restrictions and prohibitions which are in force in the relevant country. Incoming packages from European countries would, of course, be subject to the postal requirements of the country of origin and would need to have a satisfactory customs declaration.

Housing

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the gross domestic fixed capital formation in dwellings in Scotland in constant terms in each year since 1970.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 11 February 1991]: The table gives gross domestic fixed capital formation in dwellings in Scotland in current prices from 1971, the earliest year for which estimates are available on a consistent basis, until 1988.

Constant price figures are not available as separate price deflators are not available for Scotland.

[1] Estimates from 1971-79 are not strictly comparable with estimates for later years.

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the Government's allocation to local authorities for expenditure on improvement grants for private sector housing in real terms in each year since 1978-79.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 11 February 1991]: We do not issue capital allocations to local authorities specifically for expenditure on housing improvement grants. It is for each local authority to determine, from within its overall non-HRA capital allocation for assistance to the private housing sector, the level of resources it wishes to utilise for meeting such grants in the light of other competing demands for resources. Gross non-HRA capital allocations issued to local authorities since 1978-79 and incorporating any supplementary allocations made during the year, are set out in the table, expressed in 1990-91 prices.

EMPLOYMENT

Disablement Resettlement Officers

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what criteria are used to measure the performance of disablement resettlement officers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service executive agency are the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

Employment and Disability

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment show many responses he has received from Scotland to his White Paper on employment and disability.

Mr. Jackson: We have received 45 responses to my consultative document "Employment and Training for People with Disabilities" from organisations and individuals in Scotland.

Horticultural Therapy

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he last met representatives of Horticultural Therapy to discuss its role in the development of training and employment for people with disabilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: I have never met representatives from Horticultural Therapy. I understand that Horticultural Therapy is an organisation which assists people, including people with physical disabilities, mental handicaps and mental illness, to gain therapeutic benefit from horticulture. Therapeutic rehabilitation could be a factor in improving the chances of people with disabilities being able to gain and retain employment and develop in it. My Department provides considerable assistance to people with disabilities through training, rehabilitation and employment schemes and services to help them realise their full potential in work, including some support through horticultural work.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make it his policy to provide financial support to Horticultural Therapy to enable it to develop therapeutic, leisure, training and employment opportunities for people with disabilities and mental health problems throughout the United Kingdom.

Mr. Jackson: I understand that Horticultural Therapy currently receives grants from the Department of Health and the Home Office. It would be a matter for Horticultural Therapy to consider whether it wished to put appropriate proposals for which it is seeking financial support to relevant Government Departments for consideration, including to local officials in the Employment Service or to training and enterprise councils or local enterprise companies.

Disabled People (Quota System)

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to review the quota system for the employment of people with disabilities to assist people who are eligible to register but who do not wish to register.

Mr. Jackson: In our consultative document "Employment and Training for People with Disabilities" the operation of the quota scheme was discussed and comments were invited on its merits and demerits. We are presently considering the response to the consultations.

Quarterly Attenders

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment who determines the criteria for quarterly attender status; how they are set and under what provisions; and what is the number of claimants with quarterly attender status in each available year.

Mr. Jackson: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service executive agency are the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

Special Needs Training

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what guidelines have been issued by his Department to training and enterprise councils concerning special needs training; and whether he has set any specific targets for the numbers of special needs trainees.

Mr. Jackson: My Department issued guidelines to training and enterprise councils in the publication "Developing a Special Training Needs Strategy—A Guide for TECs". Further sources of help and information are listed in the publication.

There are no specific national targets for the numbers of special needs trainees. However, TECs are required to provide appropriate training for people with special training needs. The TECs are obliged by contract to identify such people by endorsement procedures in youth training and initial assessment in employment training. They must show in detail in their business plans how they intend to ensure appropriate provision.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many places were offered annually under the employment training scheme since its founding; and how many of these positions have been filled by trainees with special needs.

Mr. Jackson: Employment training started in September 1988 with 300,000 available places. During 1989-90 there were an average of 244,000 to 255,000 available places and in 1990-91 there are resources for an average of 215,000 places. In the period September 1988 to September 1990, 11 per cent. of all entrants were people with disabilities and 16 per cent. of all entrants were assessed as having a literacy and/or numeracy training need.

Textile and Clothing Industry

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will estimate how many jobs were lost in the textile and clothing industry in each quarter of 1990 by travel-to-work area and region.

Mr. Jackson: The information requested is not available.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many jobs in manufacturing industry in the north-west of England were lost in 1985, 1986, 1987, 1988, 1989 and 1990.

Mr. Jackson: There are no figures for job losses and job gains. The available information is as follows:

Employees in manufacturing in the north-west

Unadjusted December each year	Net change since previous year
1985	5,000
1986	−11,000
1987	10,000
1988	20,000
1989	−2,000
[1]1990	−2,000

[1] The latest available regional employment estimates are for September 1990.

South Glamorgan Training and Enterprise Council

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make it his policy to make available to hon. Members who may request them the documents in relation to the South Glamorgan TEC headquarters building project.

Mr. Jackson: The documents are the property of South Glamorgan TEC which is a private company. Their release is a matter for the TEC.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what date his Department first became aware of the ownership of the company which submitted the winning tender for the construction of the new South Glamorgan training and enterprise council headquarters; and whether there is any commercial connection between this company and members of South Glamorgan TEC.

Mr. Jackson: The contract to build new premises for South Glamorgan training and enterprise council has not yet been awarded.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has now inspected the documents offered to him by South Glamorgan TEC as regards the headquarters building project and the tender procedures used.

Mr. Jackson: I see no need to inspect these documents.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment on what date his Department contacted the chairman of South Glamorgan TEC regarding the decision on which building company should undertake the work of constructing the TEC's new headquarters building.

Mr. Jackson: Discussions during the development phase of South Glamorgan TEC took place at regular intervals and included various issues including the TEC's premises.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when his Department was notified that the building company owned by the chairman of South Glamorgan TEC had withdrawn its tender for the construction of the TEC's new headquarters building.

Mr. Jackson: On 7 December 1990.

Local Offices

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many representations have been received about the closure of employment service offices during 1990;

(2) how many representations have been received from hon. Members regarding the closure of employment service offices; and how they were dealt with.

Mr. Jackson: Some 140 representations have been made to me, my colleague Ministers and the employment service chief executive about the closure of employment service offices during 1990. Forty-three hon. Members have written to us on this subject. All representations have been taken into account in deciding the future of particular offices.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what guidelines exist for TEC's in respect of building projects they may undertake in respect of the procedure for requesting or openly advertising tenders.

Mr. Jackson: Training and enterprise councils, as private companies, are required to observe the provisions of the Companies Act 1989 and their memorandum and articles of association when tendering for business.

TRANSPORT

Woodford Aerodrome

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what representations British Aerospace plc has made to his Department about the extent to which Woodford aerodrome in Greater Manchester is functioning within the standards set down by the Civil Aviation Authority; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he has any plans to review the standards laid down by the Civil Aviation Authority governing the use and operating limits of individual aerodromes;

(3) if he will cite the relevant legislation under which the Civil Aviation Authority is empowered to vary or authorise a temporary derogation from the standards laid down governing the use and operating limits of individual aerodromes; and whether he monitors such variations or derogations.

Mr. McLoughlin: I have received no representations from British Aerospace about Woodford aerodrome. The statutory responsibility for regulating the safety of civil aviation in the United Kingdom rests with the Civil Aviation Authority in accordance with the Air Navigation Order 1989. This includes the granting of aerodrome licences to persons or organisations who are deemed by the authority to be fit and competent to hold such licences. I have no plans to review the standards laid down.

Aerodromes

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) for which aerodromes he has appointed British Aerospace plc a statutory undertaker; what was the date of the appointment in each case; and how long he expects the appointments to last;

(2) if he will list the circumstances in which a plc may be appointed statutory undertaker and cite the principal, relevant legislation governing its conduct thereafter.

Mr. McLoughlin: The status of certain operators as statutory undertakers is governed by section 57 of the Airports Act 1986. In the main the airports specified are those which are subject to economic regulation under part IV of the Act. Airports specified in this section are deemed to be statutory undertakers for the purposes of other legislation specified in schedule 2 of the Act.

British Aerospace, through its wholly owned subsidiary British Aerospace (Liverpool Airport) Ltd., owns 76 per cent. of Liverpool Airport plc, which is a statutory undertaker under the 1986 Act. No other airport owned by British Aerospace is a statutory undertaker.

Rolling Stock

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 30 January 1991 at col. 520, what information he has on the numbers of (i) diesel locomotives over 20 years old, (ii) electric locomotives over 20 years old, (iii) high-speed trains over 15 years old and (iv) coaching vehicles over 20 years old, in use by British Rail.

Mr. McLoughlin: Neither the Department of Transport nor Her Majesty's railway inspectorate holds this information.

Vehicle Emissions

Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will introduce an emissions check in the MOT testing scheme for cars.

Mr. Chope: The regulations implementing a carbon monoxide and hydrocarbon emissions check will be made at the earliest opportunity, subject to notification to the EC. I hope that checking will start on 1 November 1991.

If vehicles are to pass the MOT test, they will need to be properly tuned so that carbon monoxide (CO) emissions are kept as low as possible. The standards we will be setting for carbon monoxide levels are realistic, but they will be only minimum standards and motorists should aim to have their vehicles tuned to manufacturers' specifications wherever possible. The hydrocarbon emissions check will enable MOT testers to be sure the engine is running normally before they carry out the carbon monoxide check.

This will be a first step in in-service emissions checking. It is our intention that the standards in the test should reflect future improvements in engine technology and developing international standards.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Geography

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will list the people who were consulted when the consultative report on attainment targets in geography was revised over Christmas 1990; and how many of these were geographers or geography teachers;

(2) why he decided to remove inquiry skills and land-use conflicts from the attainment targets in geography.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend received advice from the National Curriculum Council in the form of its report on consultation and recommendations for both attainment targets and programmes of study in geography. He accepted the greater part of this advice, but made a number of changes in publishing the draft order for geography. At that time, he explained his view that the main emphasis of the attainment targets should be on the assessment of pupils' knowledge and understanding of aspects of geography, and that less emphasis should be placed on the assessment of skills which are not particular to geography and the study of people's attitudes and opinions.

Lancashire County Council

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what requests he has received from Lancashire county council to discuss the 1991-92 capital allocation.

Mr. Fallon: My right hon. and learned Friend has received no such requests.

Departmental Achievements

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the principal achievements of his Department since June 1987.

Mr. Eggar: We have made rapid progress in implementing the important changes introduced by Parliament in 1988 to improve standards and choice.

The Education Reform Act (ERA) includes measures to provide a national curriculum for pupils of compulsory school age, comprising a range of subjects for which targets, programmes of study and testing are being established; to widen the choice available to parents; to ensure that schools can admit pupils up to the limit of their capacity; to require all local education authorities to develop schemes for the local management of their schools, with budgets largely determined by reference to pupil numbers; to offer all schools the opportunity to opt out of local authority control and have grant-maintained status; to establish a number of city technology colleges; to establish polytechnics and other major colleges as independent institutions; to reform the government and management of further education colleges; and to reform the finance and management of the university system.

In addition, the Government continue to seek to improve teaching quality. They are continuing to provide substantial funds through direct grant to support in-service training. The criteria to which courses of initial teacher training must conform have been improved. Regulations are being prepared under which the performance of all teachers in maintained schools will be appraised on a two-year cycle. A range of initiatives has been taken on the supply and recruitment of teachers, and new arrangements for teachers' pay have been brought forward.

The Government have reformed the examination system for 16-year-olds, through the introduction of the GCSE based on national criteria, resulting in a significant increase in attainment: the proportion of school leavers in England with five or more grades A to C at GCSE—O-level—CSE rose from 26·4 per cent. in 1987 to 31·9 per cent. in 1989 and the proportion of 18-year-olds in England achieving two or more A-levels rose from 15·7 per cent. in 1987 to 17·4 per cent. in 1989. The proportion of 16-year-olds participating in full-time education in England rose from 48·4 per cent. in 1987-88 to 55·4 per cent. in 1989-90.

Participation in higher education has increased, with the proportion of 18 to 19-year-olds in Great Britain entering higher education rising from 14·6 per cent. in 1987-88 to nearly 19 per cent. in 1990-91, with every prospect of increasing still further. A student loans scheme, unique in the world in combining universal entitlement with a substantial interest subsidy, has been successfully introduced.

Accreditation of Teacher Education

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what progress Her Majesty's inspectorate have made in their role as assessors to the Council for the Accreditation of Teacher Education and to local committees as set out in Department of Education and Science circular 24/89.

Mr. Fallon: Her Majesty's inspectorate attend all meetings of the Council for the Accreditation of Teacher Education and as many meetings of the local committees as their other duties permit. Her Majesty's inspectorate comment on proposals for new and revised post-graduate certificate of education (PGCE) and bachelors of education (BEd) courses and contribute as necessary to the work of the committees. Her Majesty's inspectorate assessors are currently evaluating the work of the local committees and their progress during the first year of operation.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much extra money was given to the funding councils in respect of the new criteria and accreditation procedures for teacher training, as per circular 24/89.

Mr. Fallon: Grant to the funding councils took account in both 1990-91 and 1991-92 of the costs associated with the new arrangements for initial teacher training announced in circular 24/89. In neither year were funds earmarked within the total grant made available. It is for the funding councils to determine how to reflect the changes in their allocation of funds to individual institutions.

Music

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when the interim report of the national curriculum working group for music will be published.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I will publish the report tomorrow, together with my letter to the chairman of the group, Sir John Manduell. Copies of this initial advice, including my letter, will be placed in the Library.

ENVIRONMENT

London Docklands Communities

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of (a) public highways and thoroughfares, (b) private houses and (c) local authority houses that were lost in the development of the London Docklands development scheme; and what resources have been made available to local and family historians to trace such lost communities.

Mr. Key: Developments in London docklands have not led to the loss of any public highways or thoroughfares.

LDDC has sought to minimise the loss of existing public and private housing. Some demolition is unavoidable in connection with the LDDC's Limehouse link road and a small number of smaller schemes. Over 500 households have recently been rehoused in connection with the link. The rehousing options offered by LDDC included three attractive newly built estates to help retain existing communities as well as providing a wide choice of homes in or near the area.

LDDC has also helped a number of docklands organisations involved with local history, including some £32,000 in grants over the past two years for the Island History Trust, the Rotherhithe heritage museum, and Bermondsey memories.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each category of those eligible for poll tax exemption in 1990-91 his estimates of (a) the number exempted and (b) the cost to central Government.

Mr. Portillo: The estimated numbers exempt from the personal community charge in England at 1 June 1990 are as follows:

	Number
People whose sole or main residence is in a residential care home, nursing home, private hospital, or hostel providing care, who are receiving care	321,000
Patients whose main residence is an NHS hospital	42,000
Severely mentally handicapped	97,000
Residential care workers employed at a very low salary	1,500
Aged 18 and in receipt of child benefit, or aged 18 or 19 and in full-time education	179,000
Full time students whose term address is in Scotland or Northern Ireland	2,500
Members of religious communities	11,000
Residents of certain crown buildings (mainly military training colleges) for whom the crown makes contributions in aid to local authorities	4,000
Members of visiting forces, international headquarters and defence organisations and their dependents and diplomats	40,000
Contributors to the collective community charge	20,000
In detention (Source: Home Office)	45,000

Reliable information on persons without fixed abodes and living in short-stay hostels is not available.

There is no cost to Government as a result of these exemptions since these groups have never been liable to the community charge under the Local Government Finance Act 1988.

Mr. Richard Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate how many non-domestic ratepayers in England will have faced rates increases in cash of 50 per cent. or more when comparing 1991-92 bills with those of 1989-90.

Mr. Portillo: I estimate that approximately 700,000 non-domestic properties in England will attract rate bills in 1991-92 which will be more than 50 per cent. higher in cash terms than in 1989-90. This estimate takes no account of any changes in rateable values as a result of appeals.

Mr. Richard Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the increase in percentage terms in the average rate bill paid by (a) shops, (b) hotels and (c) all non-domestic properties between (i) 1989-90 and 1990-91 and (ii) 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Portillo: The average percentage increases in rate bills for shops and hotels in England are estimated to be:

	1989-90 to 1990-91	1990-91 to 1991-92
Shops	13	15·3
Hotels	23·7	26·4

For non-domestic properties as a whole, average bills will have risen broadly in line with increases in the retail prices index. These estimates do not take account of changes in rateable values as a result of appeals.

Mr. Richard Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the increase in the average non-domestic rate poundage in England in each year from 1981-82 to 1991-92.

Mr. Portillo: The percentage increases in the average non-domestic rate poundage are shown in the table:

	Per cent.
1981-82	20·7
1982-83	13·0
1983-84	6·5
1984-85	5·3
1985-86	7·2
1986-87	10·3
1987-88	5·3
1988-89	7·0
1989-90	7·8
1990-91	[1]7·6
1991-92	[1]10·9

[1] The figures given are the RPI figures for September 1989 and September 1990 used in setting the non-domestic rate multipliers for 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give figures for (a) rate support grant per head, (b) business rate income per head and (c) total aggregate external finance for each local authority in England.

Mr. Key [holding answer 8 February 1991]: I have today arranged for the available information to be placed in the Library of the House.

Joint Police Authorities

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to announce his proposals for capping of the joint police authorities for 1991-92; what representations he has received concerning the impact of capped police budgets on the recruitment and retention of police officers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: We have received a number of comments and representations on our intentions for charge capping for 1991-92, including those made separately to my noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State and to my right hon. and noble Friend the Minister of State, Home Office when they met a number of police authority representatives to hear their views. As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State told the House on 29 January, we stand firmly by our intentions for capping, which are, however, necessarily provisional, since under the statute capping decisions cannot be made until authorities have set their budgets.

It is now for each authority to set its budgets having regard to all relevant considerations including its statutory duties, the approved level of police manpower, our intended capping criteria, the need as appropriate for expenditure restraint and the scope for greater efficiency.

My right hon. Friend intends to take his capping decisions as soon as reasonably practicable after authorities have set their budgets. When he comes to do so he will take account of all appropriate considerations.

Property Services Agency

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to replicate the principal civil service pension scheme in the Property Services Agency Government-owned company and to make provision for its replication in the privatised companies.

Mr. Yeo: The Government have made it clear that if PSA is incorporated as a Government-owned company, or sold, steps will be taken to provide transferring employees with pension arrangements that are broadly comparable, and redundancy entitlements that are as far as possible identical, to those they have in the civil service.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if it remains Government policy that the Property Services Agency projects will be sold to the private sector this year.

Mr. Yeo: No decisions have been taken on the form or timing of sale.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if it is his intention to proceed with the establishment of the Property Services Agency as a Government-owned company on 1 July; and what plans he has to establish separate Government-owned companies for Property Services Agency Building Management, Property Services Agency Projects, and Property Services Agency Special Services.

Mr. Yeo: No decisions have been taken on whether PSA should trade as a Government-owned company or companies before sale, but a number of companies have been established to protect names.

Stolen Equipment

Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a list of the equipment stolen from his Department in the last three years for which information is available; and what was the value of each item.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a list of the equipment stolen from his Department in the last three years for which information is available; and what was the value of each item.

Mr. Heseltine: Information is not available in precisely the form requested. The Department's losses and special payments register, from which the note to the appropriation accounts on losses is prepared, contains the following details for losses by fraud, theft, arson, sabotage, malicious damage and culpable negligence:

	Number of items	Value £
1987-88	16	43,570
1988-89	44	23,070
1989-90	13	8,440

It is not possible without disproportionate cost to extract details for individual items or for loss by theft alone.

Estate Action

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on progress of his Department's estate action work at Wyrley Birch, Birmingham, and give an indication of expected date of completion.

Mr. Yeo: The Wyrley Birch estate action scheme was approved by the Department on 24 November 1989 and was scheduled for completion in 1991-92. The £4·5 million package of works involves nearly 300 flats and maisonettes, which will benefit from refurbishment works, new security measures including a concierge scheme and environmental works. We understand that the works, which are being undertaken by Birmingham city council, are progressing satisfactorily.

Energy Conservation

Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to introduce a requirement that building regulations on the construction of new housing and offices should specify higher levels of energy conservation.

Mr. Yeo: Higher thermal insulation standards and other energy conservation measures were incorporated in the amendments to the building regulations and supporting approved documents which took effect on 1 April 1990. We shall be examining the scope for further measures of this kind once we have been able to monitor how the current requirements are working in practice, and in particular whether they are giving rise to any technical problems.

Liverpool

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the recent visit of the Minister for Inner Cities to Liverpool.

Mr. Portillo: My most recent visit to Merseyside was on 10 December 1990. On that day I visited Widnes where I met the leader of Halton borough council at the chemical museum, followed by a tour of derelict land sites and the town centre Victoria square refurbishment. In Birkenhead I performed a ground-breaking ceremony to mark the commencement of an office development at the Pier hotel. During a river crossing from Birkenhead to Liverpool I was appraised of the revitalisation of the Mersey ferries by Merseytravel, and in Liverpool I received a presentation by the Mersey Barrage Company on its proposals.

Housing Corporation

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will give details of the regional distribution of the Housing Corporation's approved development programme for 1991-92.

Sir George Young: In my reply on 17 December to my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, West (Mr. Hughes), Official Report, Vol. 183, column 24, I gave details of the overall shape of the Housing Corporation's approved development programme for 1991-92. Total net expenditure for that year is set at £1·4 billion, principally for the provision of new housing for rent, but with a significant proportion for low-cost home ownership and with the aim, overall, of tackling homelessness as a priority need.

I have now agreed with the corporation the regional distribution of the programme. The distribution has been determined by reference to the recently revised housing needs indicator as the agreed measure of the incidence of need, but with upward adjustment for some regions to ensure that their permitted new approvals in 1991-92 are restored to 1989-90 levels (the current year's planning having been restricted by the corporation's earlier programming difficulties). My intention is that in 1992-93, the housing needs indicator should be applied without adjustment.

The planned regional distribution of new approvals for housing for rent in 1991-92 is shown in the table, alongside the regions' housing needs indicator scores:

Regional distribution of housing for rent (units)

Region	Revised HNI scores	1991-92 distribution of units	1991-92 distribution of units[1]
London and Home Counties (NE)	12·30	11·49	2,320
London and Home Counties (NW)	11·88	11·10	2,240
London and Home Counties (S)	15·61	14·58	2,945
West	12·50	11·68	2,360
East Midlands	9·61	8·98	1,810
West Midlands	10·93	10·94	2,210
North East	13·26	14·46	2,920
North West	10·39	11·05	2,230
Merseyside	3·53	5·72	[2]1,155
Total	[3]100·00	100·00	[4]20,190

[1] Figures represent the (rounded) mid-point of a target range.
[2] Excludes Merseyside special allocation, which provides 184 additional units.
[3] Column does not sum exactly due to rounding.
[4] Excludes special homelessness programme, which targets additional resources on the three London regions and the west.

The same basis for distribution has been used for the remaining elements of the programme, including the allocation for housing for sale.

The housing needs indicator undergoes periodic revision. The recent review was undertaken by a joint working group representing the Department of the Environment, the Housing Corporation and the National Federation of Housing Associations. Copies of the working group's second report have been placed in the Library of the House.

Bathing Waters

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with the EC Commission regarding the state of British bathing waters.

Mr. Trippier: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State spoke to Commissioner Ripa di Meana on 19 December 1990 about the revised proposals for improving the United Kingdom's bathing waters that we had sent to the EC Commission last November.

The Commissioner was pleased both about the progress we are making in improving standards and about our plans for increased investment in the future. They agreed that United Kingdom and EC Commission officials should study the United Kingdom's proposals in detail so that the Commission could satisfy itself that bathing waters were being improved as quickly as practicable. That work is currently under way.

They also agreed that once the Commission has satisfied itself that the United Kingdom is doing all that is practicably possible there would be no advantage in pursuing further legal proceedings which, of themselves, do nothing to speed improvements.

Sheffield Development Corporation

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action has been taken on outstanding matters following Sir John Garlick's inquiry into the running of Sheffield development corporation.

Mr. Portillo: As I told the House on 15 October, the Garlick report contained several criticisms. Action has been taken since then on all these, as follows:

(i) Guidance on Conflicts of Interest
I have today issued guidance to the chairmen and board members of all the urban development corporations on arrangements for dealing with conflicts of interest. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

(ii) Hallamshire Investments
The chairman of the Sheffielddevelopment corporation, Mr. Sykes, has taken no part in the affairs of Hallamshire since 19 December 1990. His formal resignation, accepted with regret by the board on that day, takes effect on 30 May, and he has leave of absence until then.

(iii) Secretarial Support: use of SDC facilities for private business
This problem has been resolved: half a secretarial post is available for Mr. Sykes' SDC business and private business will be conducted elsewhere.

(iv) Improvement of systems and procedures
An action plan has been agreed with SDC and is being implemented. This includes a thorough review of systems for handling consultancy appointments.

Community Charge Register

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each authority in England his estimate of the turnover in the community charge register, expressed as a percentage, that will take place during the current financial year; and what is the national figure.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 8 February 1991]: No estimates of the turnover in community charge registers are currently available. My Department is making arrangements to collect information on the changes to the registers in the year up to 1 June 1991.

Waste Disposal

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he intends to require waste disposal authorities to implement least-cost options where proposals for waste recycling or waste into energy projects are identified as cheaper than landfill;

(2) if he plans to require waste disposal authorities to seek tenders for waste disposal by landfill, waste recycling and energy from waste in parallel.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 12 February 1991]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment has no power to require waste disposal authorities to choose one particular waste disposal option over any other. However, part II of schedule 2 to the Environmental Protection Act 1990 will require those authorities to subject waste disposal to competitive tendering and it will empower them to consider maximising recycling and minimising pollution, as well as value for money, when assessing tenders for waste disposal contracts.

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what capital funds and grants are available to a waste disposal authority for the construction of waste recycling centres as part of an energy-from-waste scheme using refuse-derived fuel, in a public-private sector partnership.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 12 February 1991]: The sources from which local authority capital commitments can be financed are:

(i) credit approvals which permit capital expenditure to be financed by borrowing or by credit arrangements or specified grants to be taken up;
(ii) usable capital receipts;
(iii) Exchequer capital grants or contributions (other than European Community and specified capital grants) and capital grants and contributions from other persons; and
(iv) revenue contributions.

A waste disposal authority may draw on any of these sources of finance for a scheme of the type described by my hon. Friend.

The Government have announced that local authorities in England may bid for £10 million in supplementary credit approvals in 1991-92, which has been earmarked for investment in recycling facilities.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Project Funding

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the 42 projects classified in departmental records as negotiated contracts funded out of aid and trade provision monies since 1979; and if he will give the date on which such funding was authorised in each case.

Mr. Redwood: The projects are listed in the table. It should be noted that there are 41 projects listed rather than 42 as given in my hon. Friend the Minister for Trade's previous answer, 24 October 1990, Official Report, columns 205-6. This was because of double counting in the previous answer which has now been corrected.

Patent Office

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about the Patent Office.

Mr. Leigh: It is important that the financial framework for the Patent Office enables it to provide a high-quality service as economically as possible. However, at present there is no clear relationship between the level of resources allocated to the Patent Office and customer demand. In order to provide such a relationship the Patent Office will move to a net running cost regime from 1 April. While this provides a close link between customer demand and current resources, restrictions will remain, for example, on transferring funds between financial years. Additional flexibilities, which the Patent Office believes would enable it to improve the service provided to customers, would be available to a trading fund established under the Government Trading Act 1990. As announced in the trade and industry expenditure plan report (Cm. 1504) published this week, I hope that the Patent Office will achieve trading fund status later in the 1991-92 financial year. The Patent Office is today opening a consultation process on this proposal, seeking comments by 12 April. I have placed a copy of this letter in the Library.

As part of the process of approving the 1991-92 Patent Office corporate plan a review has been conducted of the performance of the Patent Office against the targets for the period 1990-91 to 1994-95 announced by the then Secretary of State, my right hon. Friend the Member for Cirencester and Tewkesbury (Mr. Ridley), on 1 March 1990, at column 295. These were three efficiency targets covering annual average improvements in patent search and trade mark productivity and a relative reduction in the size of common services over the five years, together with an annual quality of service measure for patent searches, and a quality of service measure for the five years taken together for trade mark examination. These targets continue to be testing ones for the Patent Office and I do not propose to alter them. I regret, however, that the review has identified an arithmetic error in the calculation of the overall average productivity improvement which results from these targets. The figure should have been 2·5 per cent. a year rather than 4 per cent.

Companies House

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what changes are planned to the financial regime under which Companies House operates.

Mr. Redwood: Companies House currently operates on a net running cost regime. Although this makes it possible to match resources to fluctuations in workload, it does not enable the agency to work in a fully commercial manner. For example, there are restrictions on transferring funds between financial years.

Companies House plans to take advantage of the greater financial flexibilities which should be available as a trading fund under the Government Trading Act 1990. The aim is to enable the agency to operate more efficiently, so that its many customers can enjoy an even better service representing improved value for money. I hope that Companies House will achieve trading fund status later in 1991-92, as described in the trade and industry expenditure plans report (Cm 1504) published this week.

Companies House is today issuing a consultative letter on these proposals, seeking comments by 12 April. A copy of this letter will be placed in the House of Commons Library.

Antarctica

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which members of his Department were on the British delegation to the November 1990 Antarctic treaty meeting; and whether his Department will be represented at the April 1991 meeting of the Antarctic treaty parties.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 8 February 1991]: An official from my Department was a member of the British delegation to the Antarctic treaty meeting in November 1990, and one will attend the meeting scheduled for April 1991

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what contribution was made by his Department to discussions on environmental protection measures by the Antarctic treaty parties in Chile in 1990.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 8 February 1991]: An official from my Department was a member of the British delegation to the Antarctic treaty meeting in November 1990 which took an active part in the discussions on a draft protocol to the Antarctic treaty for the protection of the Antarctic environment.

Film Industry

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has on the level of Government provision of film screen finance since 1987 in (a) Britain, (b) France, (c) Germany, (d) Italy and (e) Spain.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 11 February 1991]: I have no annual information on the level of Government screen finance in France, Germany, Italy or Spain over this period. In Britain, the Government have provided £2 million a year to British Screen Finance Ltd. The Government also provide funding for the British Film Institute, which supports a number of activities, including film production.

Government support for the British Film Institute since 1987-88 has been as follows:

	Actual expenditure (£ million)
1987-88	10·04
1988-89	11·30
1989-90	11·90
1990-91	[1]12·75

[1] Provision.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has on the number of British films made in each year since 1980.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 12 February 1991]: The number of films registered as British for the purposes of the Eady levy in the years 1980 to 1985 was as follows:

	Films
1980	41
1981	32
1982	27
1983	36
1984	37
1985	[1]18

[1] Up to 23 May.

Registration ended with the implementation of the Films Act on 23 May 1985, and no official statistics on the number of British films have been collected since that date.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps his Department has taken over the past 12 months to promote new British films overseas.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 12 February 1991]: My Department provided financial support to enable 10 film companies to attend the Cannes festival last May, and is providing support for a further 10 companies attending a festival in Los Angeles later this month.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Earnings

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the numbers of women who have earnings below (a) the tax threshold and (b) the national insurance threshold, broken down into married women, lone parents and single women at the latest date.

Mr. Maude: Provisional estimates for 1990-91, based on projections from the 1988 and 1989 family expenditure surveys, are as follows:

Numbers (million)

	Women with earnings below
	Tax threshold	National Insurance lower earnings limit
Single women	0·5	0·4
Lone parents	0·2	0·1
Married women	2·2	1·6

Budget

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects his Budget to be announced.

Mr. Mellor: As the Chancellor told my hon. Friend the Member for Dorset, South (Mr. Bruce) on 31 January, column 1095, he intends to make his Budget statement on 19 March.

General Election Payments

Dr. Marek: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give details of fees paid to, charges incurred and expenses claimed by the acting returning officer for the Wrexham constituency for the 1987 general election.

Mr. Maples: The expenses of the Wrexham parliamentary constituency, met from the consolidated fund, were as follows:

Acting Returning Officer's fee	1,073
Presiding Officers' fees	4,225
Poll Clerks' fees	5,330
Clerical assistance	3,050
Renting and adaptation of buildings	6,173
Miscellaneous expenses	4,542
	24,393

Government Employees, Scotland

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the total number of administrative staff employed by the Government in Scotland for each year since 1975, indicating by which Departments they were employed.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Details of the numbers of staff —both non-industrial and industrial—employed in Scotland, by Department, are to be found in the annual Treasury publication "Civil Service Statistics", copies of which may be seen in the statistical unit of the House of Commons Library. (Figures for 1975 and 1976 will be found in the 1976 edition.)

Bingo

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, in the financial year ended 31 March 1990, how many raids were made by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise on non-profit-making clubs for the purpose of checking that the correct bingo duty had been paid; and how much revenue was raised as a result of such raids.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: In exercise of their legal responsibility for the care and management of a range of indirect taxes, Customs and Excise make inquiries of, and visit, a variety of businesses and organisations including non-profit making members' clubs which may incur liability to bingo duty. No central record of these inquiries and visits is maintained, or of their effect on the revenue yield from bingo duty. This information could be provided only at the cost of disproportionate time and effort.

Waste Recycling

Mr. Ward: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will consider introducing financial measures to encourage manufacturers to introduce new processes and plants to recycle waste products.

Mr. Maude: I cannot anticipate my right hon. Friend's Budget statement.

Mortgage Tax Relief

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the likely increase in tax receipts in the year 1991-92 in the event that higher rate tax relief on mortgages were to be disallowed.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 11 February 1991]: The direct revenue cost of mortgage interest relief for 1990-91 at a rate in excess of the basic rate is provisionally estimated to be £470 million. A little over half this accrual cost is reflected in 1990-91 receipts. The estimate is based on the assumption that interest rates remain at their current levels.

Third-world Debt

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the net financial transfer of resources from the United Kingdom to the 17 most indebted countries for the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Maples [holding answer 12 February 1991]: The data requested are neither collected nor published by individual country.

"Next Steps" Agencies

Dr. Marek: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made towards establishing Her Majesty's Customs and Excise and the Inland Revenue as "next steps" agencies.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to the reply, 31 January 1991, c. 573]: On 25 July 1990 my predecessor announced that changes would be made in Her Majesty's Customs and Excise to enable it to operate fully on "next steps" lines, columns 239-41. The key element of these changes is that 30 commands performing the bulk of the Department's operational and service activities will become executive units. These include the 21 regional collections, the investigation division and certain units at present organised as headquarters divisions.

The head of each unit will be appointed by the chairman of Customs and Excise and will be more personally accountable for the performance of the unit against agreed plans and targets, in return for substantial new freedoms to manage and innovate. This will increase the direct involvement of the head of the unit and all its staff in the tasks to be done, and improve their effectiveness and their personal satisfaction in the unit's achievements. I expect these changes to lead to further advances in the efficiency of the units and the Department as a whole, and the quality of service provided.

These changes are set out in the framework document for the Department, "Next Steps: A Framework for Her Majesty's Customs and Excise", which has been published today, together with framework documents for East Midlands and Manchester collections and the VAT central unit, as the first three in the series of executive unit framework documents which describe the responsibilities, freedoms and accountabilities in individual units. The departmental framework document contains a programme of action which includes the introduction of significant additional personnel and financial freedoms over the next two to three years. Copies have been placed in the Library.

Framework documents for the remaining executive units will be published before the House rises for the Easter recess. The arrangements proposed for executive units will take effect from 1 April 1991.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Non-governmental Organisations

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the non-governmental organisations associated with overseas development which received financial support from his Department in 1988-89, the total sum recieved by each organisation in that year and the breakdown of the total sum received by each organisation to show separately the sums received (a) under the joint funding scheme, (b) for emergency relief and (c) other.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. Friend will recall the reply I gave to his question on 16 November last year, column 407, in which contributions to 116 non-governmental organisations in 1988-89 were set out. They totalled £63,214,364, including £11,667,912 from the joint funding scheme and £29,540,580 for emergency relief (disasters, refugees and food aid).

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the individual amounts granted to United Kingdom non-governmental organisations by the European Community in each of the years 1989 and 1990 (a) for projects in developing countries, (b) for development education and (c) other.

Mrs. Chalker: Under its non-governmental organisations programme the European Community co-finances projects in developing countries and development education projects with European non-governmental organisations. Normally the Community contributes 50 per cent. of the costs of individual projects. In 1989, the latest year for which figures are available, amounts granted to United Kingdom non-governmental organisations were as follows:

In addition Christian Aid, Oxfam, World University Service—UK, and Leicester WDC—UK received funding for projects in consortium with other European NGOs. The total grants amounted to £1,855,000.

Aid (Africa)

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those major capital projects completed over the last two years which were financed by the Overseas Development Administration in Africa.

Mrs. Chalker [holding answer Tuesday 12 February]: The most recent years for which the information requested is available are 1987 and 1988. The list of capital projects completed in those financial years from ODA's bilateral country programme funds and by the Commonwealth Development Corporation is as follows:

Country	Title

Mauritius	Assistance to Export Development and Investment Authority which leases factories to entrepreneurs.
Uganda	Rehabilitation of a sugar estate/factory and ethanol distillery owned by Sugar Corporation of Uganda.

WALES

Housing

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if Welsh local authorities will continue to provide social housing in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Although local authorities are no longer the principal providers of new social housing they will continue to play a vital enabling role, in partnership with housing associations and the private sector, and in ensuring that the housing requirements of their areas are appropriately tackled.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy concerning council housing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: It is that council housing should be managed and maintained effectively, economically, and in accordance with local housing authorities' statutory obligations; that council tenants should have the opportunity to purchase their homes under statute; that they should also have a genuine choice of landlord; and that housing associations should continue to be the main providers of new subsidised homes for rent, working in close partnership with local authorities.

Redundancies

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list, by county, the number of confirmed redundancies in Wales in the third quarter of each financial year since 1978-79; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Figures from 1978-79 to 1980-81 are not available by county. The information from 1981-82 to 1990-91 is set out in the tables.

	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91

The figures quoted relate to the October to December period for each financial year shown.
It should be noted that the 1990-91 figures are still provisional.

Corlan Housing Association

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 28 January, Official Report, columns 409-10, if he has discussed with the chairman of Tai Cymru its reasons for approving the mortgage application under section 9 of the Housing Associations Act 1985 by Corlan Housing Association for the land that it acquired from Helical Bar Ltd.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: No.

Welsh Assembly

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last met representatives from the Association of District Councils to discuss their proposals for (a) an elected Welsh Assembly and (b) a single tier of local government in Wales; and whether he will make a statement on both issues.

Mr. David Hunt: I met representatives of the Council of Welsh Districts, together with representatives of the Assembly of Welsh Counties, on 7 January. I am considering the Council of Welsh District's proposals both for an elected Welsh assembly and for a single tier of local government in Wales, and will also be considering other proposals on these matters. I will make my decisions known in due course.

Factories, Cardiganshire

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans the Development Board for Rural Wales has to build advance factories in Cardigan during the next five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The Development Board for Rural Wales has the following plans for building advance factories in Cardigan:

Year	Units	Note
1991-92	2 × 3,000 sq ft	Subject to Welsh Office approval
1992-93	4 × 1,500 sq ft	In draft programme
1993-94	1 × 1,500 sq ft	In draft programme
1994-95	2 × 3,000 sq ft	In draft programme

The development board works to a five-year "outline" industrial development programme, which is modified and reviewed on an ongoing basis. Therefore, any specific proposals beyond 1991-92 are subject to possible alteration and change according to circumstances.

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the latest developments regarding the building of advance factories at New Quay, Cardiganshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The Development Board for Rural Wales has no definite plans to construct units at New Quay at the present time and has no local land holdings.

Farmers

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he will next attend a meeting of the European Council of Ministers to discuss the problems now facing Welsh farmers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: In line with long-established practice, my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food takes the lead in European Community discussions and negotiations. I know that my right hon. Friend has the interests of Welsh farmers clearly in mind in that context, and I am in regular contact with him.

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had in the current year with the National Farmers Union in Wales about livestock compensatory allowances; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I met the National Farmers Union of Wales on Monday 28 January 1991 to discuss, among other issues, hill livestock compensatory allowances.

Sports Centres

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many times he has visited the national sports centre for Wales;

(2) how many times he has visited the outdoor pursuits centre at the Menai straits, Gwynedd.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: My right hon. Friend has not yet had the opportunity to visit the national sports centre for Wales, Cardiff, or the national watersports centre, Plas Menai.

Housing (Elderly People)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many county council homes for the elderly there are in each of the counties of Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The information requested is shown in the table:

County	Number of homes for elderly people[1]
Clwyd	20
Dyfed	29
Gwent	24
Gwynedd	27
Mid Glamorgan	34
Powys	14
South Glamorgan	21
West Glamorgan	21
Wales	190

[1]As at 31 March 1990.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what policy initiatives he proposes for the running of county council homes for the elderly in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: My right hon. Friend's proposals for the further improvement of services for elderly people in Wales is set out in chapter 11 of the White Paper "Caring for People—Community Care in the Next Decade and Beyond" (Cm 849). As regards county council-run homes, the White Paper makes it clear that we intend that their standard should be at least on a par with those expected by county councils of the private and voluntary sectors, and that those standards should be monitored and controlled by the inspection units which authorities are required to set up by 1 April 1991. In drawing up their plans for social care, which are to be published by 1 April 1992, social services authorities will need to review, in the light of their assessment of local needs and circumstances, the extent and nature of the residential care they provide. They will need to do this in terms of the balance with wider patterns of domiciliary and day care and also with regard to the need to maximise choice from a variety of sources of care.

Nursing and Residential Homes

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) private nursing homes and (b) private residential homes there are in each of the counties of Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The information requested is shown in the following tables:

County	Number of private nursing homes[1]
Clwyd	70
Dyfed	25
Gwent	51

County	Number of private nursing homes[1]
Gwynedd	28
Mid Glamorgan	8
Powys	8

West Glamorgan	26	6	16
Wales	480	23	61

[1] As at 31 March 1990.
[2] A number of these homes are dually registered as both nursing and residential homes and will therefore have also been included in the first table.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy concerning private nursing and residential homes in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: My right hon. Friend's proposals for the further improvement of all forms of social care are set out in chapter 11 of the White Paper "Caring for People —Community Care in the Next Decade and Beyond" (Cm 849). The Government believe that people should enter residential and nursing home care as a positive choice. Social services authorities, working closely with health authorities and other interests, should ensure the development of adequate networks of domiciliary, day and residential care in the private, voluntary and public sectors which maximise choice and ensure high quality in all aspects of provision.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Surplus Food

Mr. Burns: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what arrangements he is making for implementing the EC surplus food scheme in the United Kingdom for 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The European Commission has reviewed the operation of this scheme in 1988 and 1989, and its report is awaited. In the meantime the Commission has decided to continue the distribution of surplus food from intervention stocks to the most deprived citizens of the Community. I have to say that the Government's view remains that the scheme is an inefficient method of dealing with surpluses and of assisting those whom it should help. Nevertheless, as in the past, the Government do not wish to deprive eligible United Kingdom citizens of an opportunity available to their counterparts elsewhere in the Community.

The Commission has allocated some 150 million ecu to the European Community for this purpose, the same as in 1990. The United Kingdom has maintained its share of the budget in obtaining some 24·95 million ecu, which represents about £17·62 million worth of butter and beef. This produce will continue to be distributed in the United Kingdom by those charitable and other non-profit making organisations wishing to do so and meeting the prescribed conditions. To improve the cost-effectiveness of the scheme, preference may be given to organisations capable of distributing produce widely throughout their local community and to groups of smaller organisations co-operating in the same locality. The scheme applies to certain clearly defined categories of people. Pensioners or the unemployed are eligible only if they fall into one or other of these categories. The coverage of those who are eligible will depend on the extent to which suitable organisations volunteer to participate. I am arranging for further details to be publicised widely and to be sent to the appropriate bodies, and I will place a copy of this information in the Library.

Fisheries Council

Mr. Mans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Fisheries Council held in Brussels on 19 and 20 December.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 14 January 1991, Official Report, col. 388]: I am pleased to announce that the Commission has agreed that the United Kingdom may exempt from the days in port requirement any vessel which satisfies the Fisheries Departments that it will carry only longlines or nets having a mesh size equal to or greater than 110 mm, with or without a 100 mm square mesh panel. Regulations to amend the Sea Fishing (Days in Port) Regulations 1991 (SI 1991/139) will be laid before Parliament shortly.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what advice he has received from the National Rivers Authority concerning burial of BSE-affected cattle by farmers under their own land.

Mr. Maclean: The National Rivers Authority has provided advice on the burial of carcases generally which has been incorporated into the revised "Guidance of Good Agricultural Practice for the Protection of Water" which was published in draft on 15 January. Copies are available in the Library of the House.

Grain

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether all export contracts on grain exported to the EC state EC mass per storage volume, as set out in SI 1975 No. 655, arranged by British Cereal Exports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: British Cereal Exports is a promotional body which aims to identify the needs of grain buyers in export markets and to help ensure that these are met competitively by United Kingdom exporters. It does not itself export grain.

The details of grain export contracts are matters to be determined by the exporter and the importer of the grain. Cereals export trade organisations have recently been reminded of the provisions of SI 1975 No. 655 which lays down specific requirements to be met if the term EC mass per storage volume is used in trade in cereals between the United Kingdom and other member states of the European Community.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the specific weight of grain taken into intervention in the United Kingdom is assessed on instruments which comply with the requirements of SI 1975 No. 655; and what those regulations require in respect of contracts for grain weighed out of intervention containing the words EC mass per storage volume.

Mr. Curry: The use of instruments complying with the requirements of SI 1975, No. 655 is not stipulated by EC regulation 1908/84, which governs intake of grain into intervention, nor are such instruments used for that purpose in practice. Contracts for sales of grain out of intervention do not contain the words "EC mass per storage volume"; they are not affected, therefore, by the provisions of the SI, which is concerned only with trade in cereals between the United Kingdom and other member states of the European Community.

Tourism

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if, further to his answer of 1 February at column 693, to the hon. Member for Swindon, he will list those organisations in the tourism industry which (a) were asked for their views and (b) responded.

Mr. Curry: We did not specifically ask organisations for their views before the abolition of these capital grants because this would have given a clear signal of our intentions and would have led to a rush of applications to beat the deadline. Over the period since the introduction of the farm diversification grant scheme in 1988, the Government have received representations about it from a number of organisations, including:

The National Farmers Union
The Country Landowners Association
The English Tourist Board
The British Hotels, Restaurants and Caterers Association
The Youth Hostels Association

Bovine Tuberculosis

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the number of individual confirmed cases of bovine tuberculosis by month, for each county of England and Wales in 1990.

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is available only by quarter. Figures for October to December are provisional pending laboratory tests. Details for England are given in the following table.

The figures for Wales are a matter for the Secretary of State for Wales.

Fallen Animals

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has to assist hill farmers who are experiencing problems with disposal of fallen stock; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the present situation in respect of the disposal of fallen animals; and if he intends to introduce any legislation in this area.

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Members to the letter I wrote on 30 January to Sir Simon Gourlay, president of the National Farmers Union, on this matter, a copy of which I have placed in the Library of the House. I have no current plans to introduce any further legislation.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Correspondence

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Lord President of the Council what is the latest estimate of the average cost of a ministerial reply to letters from right hon. and hon. Members.

Mr. MacGregor: No definite costings are available. A recent scrutiny of ministerial correspondence estimated total costs of £17·5 million for some 250,000 ministerial replies, a mean average of £70. The estimate was based on small samples, and revealed a considerable range of costs related to the complexity of each Department's caseload.

1851 Exhibition

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Lord President of the Council when the holder of his office last attended a meeting of the royal commissioners for the exhibition of 1851.

Mr. MacGregor: My predecessor, the right hon. and learned Member for Surrey, East (Sir G. Howe), attended a meeting of the commissioners in December 1989.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Magistrates Courts

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases related to non-payment of the poll tax have been dealt with by each magistrates court in Wales during 1990; and what was the average amount of time allocated to cases of non-payment of the poll tax by each magistrates court.

Mr. John Patten: The figures for the number of summonses and liability orders issued and the amount of time devoted to the enforcement of the community charge by magistrates courts in Wales during 1990 are set out in the table:

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much money is currently allocated to magistrates courts specifically to assist with cases related to the poll tax; and whether he has any plans to increase resources to deal with the current situation.

Mr. John Patten: Specific grant is provided to support expenditure on the workload of the magistrates courts as a whole. The Government's proposals for increased grant support were set out in the Home Office annual report 1991 (Cm 1509), but we continue to keep the community charge enforcement position under review.

Probation Service

Mr. Bidwell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has had concerning delay in implementing the pay increase for probation officers of November 1990; what assessment he has made of the effect of the delay on morale in the service; and to when the increase will be backdated.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is yet in a position to authorise the new salary scale for probation officers upon which there has been arbitration.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to announce the probation officers' 1990-91 pay award.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations about the length of time it has taken to fix the increase in probation officers' salaries effective from 1 July 1990.

The main part of the delay was due to the staff side's decision to refer the matter unilaterally to arbitration. My right hon. Friend received the report of the ACAS arbitration panel on 6 November 1990, nearly four months after the employers' side made their final offer of 9·25 per cent.

Our decision to accept the increase of 9·25 per cent. and one of the three structural changes to the salary scale included in the arbitration award was announced on 6 February 1991. I expect most probation officers to see this decision as reasonable.

Departmental Achievements

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the principal achievements of his Department since June 1987.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The number of police posts in England and Wales increased by 4,285, bringing the total to 127,155. The number of civilians supporting the police increased by 4,699 to 45,405, and since 1986-87 expenditure on the police has increased by 19·5 per cent. in real terms. These increases have been accompanied by action to ensure that the police use their resources efficiently and to enhance their capacity to deal with crime of all kinds, including that with an international dimension.

Sixteen safer cities projects have been set up in inner-city areas supporting over 850 initiatives with the objective of reducing crime, lessening the fear of crime and creating conditions in which economic enterprise and community life can flourish. Crime Concern, an independent body which seeks to encourage and facilitate local crime prevention activity and to draw the business sector into crime prevention, has been established. Advice on crime prevention has been issued to local authorities, other relevant agencies and to the public, with over 3 million copies of the crime prevention handbook distributed. The standing conference on crime prevention meets annually to discuss and promote new crime prevention ideas.

My Department has continued to give the highest priority to tackling drug misuse. The London world ministerial drug summit reaffirmed our commitment to be at the forefront, both at home and abroad, of efforts to combat drug misuse. Reciprocal agreements with seven further countries on confiscation of the proceeds of drug trafficking have been concluded, bringing the total to 19. The first five local teams set up under the drug prevention initiative to strengthen community resistance to drug misuse have now started work.

Legislation has been passed to enable the United Kingdom to ratify the United Nations convention against the illicit traffic in drugs; to enhance the control of firearms; to strengthen the country's defences against terrorism; to increase the powers available to the courts for dealing with football hooligans; to improve our ability to give effect to our policy of firm but fair immigration control; to create a new and more open and competitive framework for the licensing and regulation of independent radio and television services, leading to greater choice for viewers and listeners while maintaining proper safeguards for programme quality and standards; to remove outdated restrictions on licensing laws; to enable the United Kingdom to participate more effectively in the international fight against crime, including a major reform of the extradition law; to make provision for courts to order the confiscation of the proceeds of profitable crime; to provide for unduly lenient sentences to be reviewed; to create a statutory right for the victims of crime to receive compensation; to tighten the law on possession of knives and to ban the sale of offensive weapons which have no legitimate use; to strengthen the jury system; to reform the law on official secrets by replacing section 2 of the Official Secrets Act 1911 with provisions protecting just six classes of official information; and to put the security service on a statutory basis, with the appointment of a commissioner and provision for complaints to be made to an independent tribunal. Legislation has been passed to encourage key Hong Kong personnel and their families to remain there by giving them the assurance of British citizenship in order to help them maintain the future stability and prosperity of the territory.

Since the beginning of 1987 five new prisons have been opened, providing some 2,500 places, and construction has begun at 13 other sites, which will provide nearly 8,000 additional prison places. By the end of March 1991 nearly 3,000 more places will also have been provided at existing establishments. The Home Office has embarked on a major programme to improve existing prisons. At the beginning of 1987 about 45 per cent. of prison places had access to night sanitation, but by April this year 60 per cent. of all places are expected to have access. Conversion of the remaining places is a high priority.

Television Licences

Mr. Bellotti: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to provide for the issue of refunds for unexpired television licences where the person to whom the licence was issued has died and more than one month remains valid on the licence.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the estimated cost of the concessions of the reduced television licence for registered blind people;

(2) whether he has any proposals to extend the reduced cost television licence currently available to registered blind people to those who are registered as partially sighted.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The cost of the concession in 1989-90 in terms of revenue forgone was £47,500. The concession is available to people so blind as to be unable to perform any work for which eyesight is essential. There are no plans to change that criterion.

Police, Staffordshire

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what increase has been made to the number of police officers and civilian auxiliaries for Staffordshire over each of the past five years; and what has been the increase or decrease in crimes reported, detected and cleared up over that period.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is set out in the tables:

(i) Increase in resources

Year	Police Officer Establishment	Civilian Staff
1985-86	Nil	+20
1986-87	+27	+11
1987-88	+25	+3

Voluntary Repatriation

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the facilities available for immigrants who seek voluntary repatriation; how many have applied for such repatriation over the past five years; what has been the cost; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Financial assistance is available in certain circumstances from public funds for non-British citizens settled in this country who wish to return permanently overseas to a non-European country. The scheme, which is operated under section 29 of the Immigration Act 1971, is administered on behalf of the Government by the International Social Service of Great Britain. Assistance, which is means-tested, and is limited to the payment of fares and incidental expenses incurred in leaving the United Kingdom, including the transport of a small amount of personal effects. There is no resettlement grant.

Over the past five years the number of applications, the number of cases assisted, the number of individuals leaving the United Kingdom and the cost were as follows:

Financial year	Applications	Cases assisted	Individuals benefitting	Cost[1] £
1986-87	141	41	65	51,425·87
1987-88	89	38	61	41,400·23
1988-89	75	37	45	45,541·08
1989-90	70	43	55	42,484·65
1990-91[2]	41	25	29	30,666·02

Parking, London

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will hold discussions with the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on the scope for further action by officers to deter the parking of untaxed and uninsured vehicles on streets in Greater London.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The enforcement of offences relating to untaxed and uninsured vehicles is an operational matter and therefore for the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis. I understand that police officers and traffic wardens routinely report vehicle excise offences involving parked vehicles to the Department of Transport and support enforcement campaigns run by that Department. Insurance offences normally come to light only when a driver is stopped and asked to produce his documents.

Overseas Electors

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list, by parliamentary constituency, the numbers of overseas electors included in the draft electoral register for 1991-92, together with totals for each constituent part of the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information requested is set out in the table. The figures do not include valid applications which were received too late for inclusion in the draft register, which was published on 28 November 1990. Final figures for the electoral register for 1991-92 will be published by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys in the summer.

Drug Offences

Mr. John Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the latest recorded figures for convictions for (a) class 1 and (b) class 2 drug offences and the figures for each year from 1980; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 4 February 1991]: Data are readily available only for 1986 onwards and information on the number of convictions recorded in the United Kingdom concerning class A and class B drugs is given in the table.

United Kingdom

Year	Number of convictions relating to: Class A drugs	Class B drugs
1986	4,486	21,155
1987	4,263	21,489
1988	3,692	23,102

Adoption

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many clearance papers were issued for the admission to the United Kingdom of children adopted abroad, or in the process of adoption, for each of the last five years in total and by country of origin; and if he will make a statement concerning Romanian children in particular.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 12 February 1991]: The available information is that, since December 1989, 149 Romanian children have been granted entry clearance to come to the United Kingdom with a view to adoption by British couples. Fifteen applications have been refused or withdrawn and 42 applications are currently outstanding, 39 of which have been made since 1 December 1990. Earlier information about Romanian children and information about children from other countries granted entry clearance with a view to adoption in the United Kingdom has not been collected centrally.

Explosives

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration was given to the implications for the financing of appropriate policing when the proposed Control of Explosives Order was drafted.

Mr. Forth: I have been asked to reply.

This question relates to proposals currently being prepared for the Home Secretary by the Health and Safety Commission.

The financial implications of policing the proposed control of explosives regulations were considered during the preparation of the related cost-benefit analysis. This analysis estimates that the proposed regulations will lead to clear savings for the police.

HEALTH

Breast Care Nurses

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many breast care nurses, and at what grade, are currently in post in each district.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not collected centrally.

Mental Health Grant

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the potential level of the specific mental health grant to each local authority and give an indication of the take-up proposed at the latest convenient date;

(2) if any local authorities have yet indicated they are unable to take up the offer of the specific mental health grant.

Mr. Dorrell: The indicative allocations for each local authority are set out in circular HC(90)24/LAC(90)10, a copy of which is in the Library. So far, over 70 per cent. of authorities have notified their intention to take up the grant and none has advised us that the grant will not be taken up. We will publish a full list when we have received the outstanding notifications.

AIDS

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what publicity arrangements he has made to inform people of the protection afforded by, and to advise on the proper use of, a safe spermicide combined with condoms as a protection against AIDS; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The AIDS public education campaign has adopted a broad-based strategy which offers people clear health educational advice on which to base informed decisions about their sexual behaviour. This includes advice that the use of condoms can reduce the risk of infection with HIV. Clinical studies do not show that spermicides confer additional protection against HIV infection.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what publicity arrangements he has made to inform people of the relative safety of water-based and oil-based lubricants in terms of contraception and as a protection against AIDS; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The AIDS public education campaign has, since inception, advocated that where lubricants are used with condoms they should be water-based, and warned that oil-based lubricants may damage or weaken rubber condoms. This advice has been given in leaflets and press advertisements since 1986.

Mental Illness

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much he expects will be transferred from the national health service to Dorset county council for the resettlement of discharged mentally ill patients as a result of the sale of Coldharbour and Herrison hospitals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: Neither of the hospitals in question has been sold and the amount of any future transfer will be for the region to discuss with Dorset county council and the district health authorities involved. My hon. Friend may wish to contact Mr. Robin Buchanan, the chairman of Wessex regional health authority, for the information he seeks.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the number of mental illness hospital beds in each district within the West Midlands regional health authority area by name in the three latest years for which figures are available.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 4 February 1991]: The number of mental illness beds in West Midlands regional health authority is given in the table.

Gulf Casualties

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines have been issued by his Department to local social services departments concerning contingency plans for the rehabilitation of disabled service men and women injured during the Gulf war.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Kent (Mr. Rowe) on 5 February at column 154.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, under Operation Granby, how many health authorities have been directed to refuse non-emergency admissions to hospitals; how many such refusals have been made to date; if he will make funds available to enable wards and beds closed temporarily and permanently to be reopened, so that non-emergency admissions may be made in addition to any Gulf casualties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: No health authority has been directed to refuse non-emergency admissions to hospitals. The national health service should get sufficient notice of casualties to enable hospitals to cope without emptying beds in advance. It will be for health authorities to decide whether wards not currently operational will need to be reactivated to receive casualties from the Gulf.

As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 16 January, the Government are providing extra money to meet the full costs of any Gulf casualties. We have told health authorities that they should spend what is necessary and we have given guidance on how to account for and reclaim Gulf costs.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on the cancellation of operations by the national health service because of the Gulf crisis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: None. The national health service should get sufficient notice of casualties to enable hospitals to cope without emptying beds or cancelling operations at the present time.

Blood Products

Mr. Bellotti: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much it costs to collect (a) a pint of human blood and (b) a donation of plasma.

Mr. Dorrell: The average cost of collecting, processing and transporting a unit of blood in 1989-90 was £29·25. The cost of collecting a donation of plasma is not held centrally.

Patients' Notes

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he is satisfied with current arrangements for protecting the confidentiality of patients' notes which may be subject to scrutiny by the family health services authorities.

Mr. Dorrell: Personal health information is strictly confidential. It may be examined only by authorised persons, and only to the extent authorised. The Department is working on draft guidance on the confidentiality of personal health information in the NHS which will be issued for consultation shortly.

Staff Accommodation

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance his Department gives to health authorities on steps to take in order to protect NHS staff resident in hospital accommodation blocks from the risk of fire.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave on 7 February at column 239.

NHS Drugs

Mr. Peter Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements exist for the return to pharmacies of medicinal drugs prescribed and supplied to national health service patients but not taken.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No formal arrangements exist for the return to pharmacies of unused medicines, but all pharmacies accept such medicines for safe and appropriate destruction.

It is not considered good professional practice to use any medicines where there is uncertainty as to the quality of the medicine.

Mr. Peter Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what would be the estimated net saving to the national health service annually if a system for the return of unused medicinal drugs from nursing homes to pharmacies were established;

(2) what estimate his Department can make of the value of medicinal drugs prescribed and supplied to national health service patients which are not taken.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information on which to base such estimates is not available.

Mr. Peter Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether his Department will arrange for the return of prescription medicinal drugs from registered nursing homes to pharmacies when these drugs are not taken by the patient for reasons such as changed prescription, removal to another institution or death, if the packaging is still intact or the nature and origin of the drugs is certified by a qualified person.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The person responsible for a nursing home has a statutory duty to make adequate arrangements for the recording, safe-keeping, handling and disposal of drugs. Health authorities are responsible for ensuring that the statutory requirements are met and must inspect each home at least twice a year.

It is not considered good professional practice to use medicines where there is uncertainty as to the condition under which a medicine has been stored.

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many general practitioners in previous years, in complying with his wishes to move to use computers, applied for a grant for the installation of a computer system that was above the figure of payment set out in the published computer cost reimbursement schedule.

Mr. Dorrell: No figures are held centrally either in respect of individual claims made by GPs or individual amounts reimbursed by family health services authorities.

Social Workers for the Blind

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action his Department is taking to assist in the recruitment and training off specialist social workers for the blind.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Recruitment and training of staff are the responsibility of employers. The Department is funding a number of initiatives to enable employers to make most effective use of existing work forces and I have recently announced a training strategy aimed at improving the supply and training of the personal social services work force at all levels. In addition, we also provide funding specifically for the training of rehabilitation workers with the blind.

NHS Spending

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was (a) total NHS spending and (b) hospital and community health services spending as a proportion of real national disposable income in each year since 1987-88.

Mr. Dorrell [pursuant to the reply 28 January, column 433]: I have subsequently been advised that the term "real national disposable income" does appear in the national accounts. The cash figures that underlie this series are the gross national disposable income (GNDI) figures and the following table gives gross NHS and HCHS spending in the United Kingdom as a proportion of GNDI for the years 1987-88 to 1989-90.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Iraq

15. Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on relations with Iraq.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Our relations with Iraq are bad.

The Gulf

17. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to pay an early visit to the Gulf to discuss the crisis with Governments of Gulf states.

29. Mr Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to visit Saudi Arabia to discuss the Gulf war with the Emir of Kuwait; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: I visited Egypt and Saudi Arabia last week, and also called on the Emir of Kuwait in Ta'if. I was greatly encouraged by the resolve and determination of these important members of the coalition.

22. Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Arab League states about the further exploration of diplomatic solutions to the Gulf crisis.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Discussions with members of the union of Maghreb nations and of the Arab League continue. We all agree on the need to end the conflict as early as possible on the basis of the relevant Security Council resolutions. But a diplomatic solution can be possible only once Saddam Hussein is willing to comply with the Security Council resolutions.

23. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made with our European partners on burden-sharing in connection with the United Kingdom costs of the war in the Gulf.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are in touch with a number of countries, including European partners, who may be willing to contribute to our costs. Germany has agreed to provide a cash sum of £275 million. This is in addition to practical assistance which the Germans and other partners have already made available in support of British deployments to the Gulf.

24. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response he has made to peace proposals from Iran.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Iranian Government are reported to have put forward to Iraq certain suggestions for achieving a peaceful solution to the current crisis. The details have not been disclosed, but we would support any proposal based on a complete Iraqi withdrawal from Kuwait and full compliance with the relevant Security Council resolutions.

26. Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the latest Gulf position.

30. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the latest developments in the Gulf.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The allied coalition remains united and steadfast in its determination to prosecute the military campaign until we know that all Iraqi forces are out of Kuwait. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary found complete agreement on this during his recent visit to Egypt and Saudi Arabia. We do not want the conflict to continue a day longer than necessary. But even as recently as 48 hours ago Baghdad radio announced that

"Iraq will never cease fighting until total victory is achieved."

In the light of this sustained Iraqi belligerence it would be irresponsible for the Governments of the allied coalition to agree to a ceasefire, or a pause in hostilities, while our troops are engaged and exposed. None the less, we continue to hope that the Iraqi leadership will see sense and, as a first step, make an unequivocal commitment to withdraw from Kuwait accompanied by concrete steps towards full compliance with UN Security Council resolutions.

28. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy on the creation of a stable framework for lasting peace and security in the Gulf.

31. Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy on the creation of a stable security framework in the Gulf.

36. Sir Marcus Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the consideration being given to peace and security in the middle east after the present hostilities.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It must be for the Gulf states and others in the region to decide future arrangements for peace and security once hostilities have ended. We are ready to play our part, if asked to do so, in support of those arrangements.

32. Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made with other countries on burden sharing with United Kingdom costs of the conflict in the Gulf.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We continue to have discussions with a number of countries which may be willing to contribute to our costs. Generous cash contributions have been pledged by Kuwait, Germany, the United Arab Emirates, Japan, and Hong Kong totalling £1·2 billion.

33. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the non-military assistance being provided by European and other countries in respect of the allied efforts in the present Gulf conflict.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Considerable non-military assistance is being provided by European and other countries to the multinational force in the Gulf, mainly in the form of financial backing or medical and other logistical support. We are still in discussion with a number of countries which have not contributed directly to the military effort, but which may be willing to help defray our costs.

Soviet Union

19. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to visit the Soviet Union to discuss United Kingdom-Soviet relations.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State attaches importance to maintaining a dialogue with the Soviet Government. Dates for his next visit to the Soviet Union have not yet been fixed.

38. Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the Soviet ambassador to discuss United Kingdom-Soviet relations.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: British-Soviet relations were among the subjects discussed when my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State saw the Soviet ambassador on 31 January.

Drugs

20. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on British participation in the international fight against drugs.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We give high priority to combating drugs problems. We welcome the recent appointment of Mr. Giacomelli to head the new United Nations international drug control programme and will continue to work vigorously with the United Nations, in the European Community, with the Council of Europe's Pompidou group and through bilateral assistance programmes in the international fight against drugs.

Cyprus

21. Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the high commissioner of the republic of Cyprus to discuss United Nations resolutions on Cyprus.

Mr. Garel-Jones: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs last met the Cyprus high commissioner formally on 1 November. He called on me on 15 November.

British-American Relations

25. Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to meet the United States Secretary of State to discuss British-American relations.

Mr. Hurd: I am often in touch with Secretary Baker and hope to meet him again within the next few weeks.

Dalai Lama

27. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he is proposing to meet the Dalai Lama of Tibet when he visits Britain next month.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so.

Guatemala

34. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next intends to meet representatives of the Government of Guatemala.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Neither I nor my right hon. Friend have any present plans to meet representatives of the Guatemalan Government. Developments in the Gulf obliged me to abandon plans to attend the inauguration of President Serrano on 14 January. I look forward to visiting Guatemala when I can.

East Timor

35. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the current situation in East Timor.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We support the efforts of the UN Secretary-General to promote contacts between the Indonesian and Portuguese Governments aimed at achieving a settlement which reflects the interests of the people of East Timor.

International Criminal Court

37. Mr. Archer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will initiate discussions with the United Nations with a view to establishing an international criminal court.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The question of establishing an international criminal court is already under consideration at the United Nations in connection with the draft code of crimes against the peace and security of mankind. The United Kingdom participates in these discussions, most recently in November 1990.

Colombia

39. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Government of Colombia about human rights.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Human rights were discussed during the visit to London of the then President Barco in April 1990. We take every suitable opportunity to register our deep concerns about human rights in Colombia. We welcome President Gaviria's commitment to uphold them.

Mr. Dimitri Birman

Mr. Archer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Soviet authorities regarding the case of Dimitri Birman who has been refused permission to emigrate to Israel.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Her Majesty's embassy in Moscow has made representations to the Soviet Foreign Ministry about the case of Dimitri Birman, and we shall continue to follow it closely.

Departmental Achievements

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the principal achievements of his Department since June 1987.

Mr. Hurd: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office and Her Majesty's representatives overseas have protected and promoted British interests and pursued the Government's overseas objectives.

The United Kingdom has played a prominent part in bringing about constructive change in Europe. With other western partners we have promoted democracy and human rights in eastern Europe, a policy pursued over many years which has at last borne fruit. To help the further progress of eastern European countries the FCO is managing a programme of assistance—the know-how fund. The Government have joined others in setting up the European bank for reconstruction and development, whose headquarters will be in London.

The FCO played a leading part in the negotiations which completed the unification of Germany and the restoration of its sovereignty, a longstanding objective of British policy.

The United Kingdom contributed to the conclusion of a treaty on conventional forces in Europe which, if implemented, will enhance stability in Europe. This treaty, the charter of Paris, which was agreed at the summit meeting of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, and the NATO London declaration, form the foundation of a Europe with greater freedom and security for all.

In the European Community, the FCO has worked with other Government Departments for:

completion of the single market (70 per cent. of legislation agreed); reform of the common agricultural policy, including the 1988 budget decision;

strengthening European political co-operation; and a co-ordinated EC contribution to eastern Europe.

The United Kingdom has made a substantial contribution to change in South Africa where the release of Nelson Mandela and the opening of direct talks between the South African Government and the ANC are important achievements. We help black communities in South Africa.

At the United Nations the United Kingdom has contributed to the adoption of resolution 598 which led to the ceasefire in the Iran-Iraq conflict. We supported the United Nations's negotiations which brought Namibia peacefully to independence.

The United Kingdom played an important part in securing a prompt, firm and united response by the United Nations Security Council to the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait, and joined our partners in the international coalition in action to remove Iraqi forces from Kuwait in pursuit of United Nations Security Council resolutions.

The United Kingdom has been at the forefront of international co-operation to combat drug trafficking and to protect the environment.

The Overseas Development Administration of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office has maintained a substantial aid programme. Gross public expenditure on overseas aid in the period 1987-89 totalled £4·75 billion. Priorities include supporting economic reforms, promoting good government, and reversing environmental degradation. About 80 per cent. of our bilateral aid has been allocated to the poorer countries. We have taken the lead in promoting measures to reduce the debt burden of poorer countries. We have responded swiftly to appeals for emergency aid—over £100 million from 1987-89.

The assistance provided to business men by Foreign and Commonwealth Office staff overseas (nearly one third of whom are engaged in trade promotion work) has contributed to export sales by small, medium and major United Kingdom companies.

Consuls and honorary consuls have provided assistance to an increasing number of British nationals travelling and living overseas. During the latter part of 1990 our embassies in Baghdad and Kuwait helped with the evacuation to the United Kingdom of 1,796 people.

European Political Union

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's attitude towards the inter govermental conference on political union in the light of the Gulf conflict.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The 4 February meeting of the intergovernmental conference on political union discussed proposals for a common foreign and security policy. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs and others emphasised the need to take account of the Twelve's response to the Gulf crisis. Foreign Ministers will return to this subject at subsequent meetings of the IGC.

Human Rights

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made at the current session of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: As observers at this year's Commission on Human Rights, our delegation is playing an active part in its work. I visited Geneva on 4-5 February and gave a speech to the commission, a copy of which is being placed in the Library of the House. We shall continue our efforts in the remaining weeks of the commission and beyond to promote respect for fundamental human rights and to urge compliance by all states with their international obligations in this field.

Western Sahara

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Government of Morocco on the question of independence for western Sahara.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have remained strictly impartial in this dispute. However, as one of the permanent members of the Security Council, we have consistently supported the United Nations Secretary General's efforts to arrange a free and fair referendum to determine the territory's future.

Value-for-Money Exercise

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the (a) target and (b) progress as at 31 December 1990 of the value-for-money exercise in respect of (i) consular work, (ii) information work, (iii) cultural work, (iv) commercial work, (v) overseas accommodation and (vi) non-governmental organisations.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 31 January 1991]: The following progress had been made by the FCO by 31 December 1990 in meeting the value-for-money targets set for financial year 1990-91.

Target	Progress
(i) Consular Work
(a) To deal with the greater demand for consular services arising from the 6 per cent. increase in the number of British nationals travelling overseas within existing resources.	The greater volume of travellers to 31 December 1990 was dealt with within overall existing resources.
(b) To increase interest in, and usage of, public education television and radio fillers; to achieve free broadcast at airtime value of £1 million; and in 1990-91 to target our public information campaign more closely towards those travellers identified as being the major cause of the avoidable consular workload.	Efforts to achieve the £1 million figure by year end continue. The targetting of the information campaign has been achieved through issuing a leaflet with all British visitors' passports since October 1990, and is ongoing for 1991.
(c) To complete, by the end of 1990-91, a phased programme for the issue at overseas posts of passports in the European Community common format without any overall increase in existing staffing levels, while at the same time coping with a forecast increase in the number of passport applications.	Under the above programme, the nine largest passport issuing posts overseas are to be equipped for the computerised issue of passports in the European Community common format. By 31 December 1990, five of these posts were operating the new system. Two more will be equipped before the end of the current financial year: the remaining two posts will be converted to the new system during financial year 1991-92. On the basis of information currently available, it is expected that the programme will be completed within existing staffing levels.
(ii) Information Work
(a) To improve the speed of delivery of ministerial statements and other verbatim material to overseas posts, while reducing annual costs by £135,000.	Project scheduled for completion on 1 July 1991.
(b) To improve the effectiveness of other information services (eg through better targetting on foreign policy objectives) without increasing costs.	Improved systems established for the management of publications, including tighter ordering procedures, more consistency of presentation and better quality control. Savings on television production and exhibitions have been achieved by recruiting specialists and contracting out less work, eg a 40 per cent. saving on the cost of a new film about the workings of Parliament. Efficiency savings achieved to date—£126,500.
(iii) Cultural Work
(a) To increase the number of FCOSAS awards jointly funded with United Kingdom institutions, private trusts, private sector and other partners from 156 in 1988-89 to 275 in 1990-91.	Evidence at 31 December 1990 suggested that 475 such awards would be made in 1990-91.

(iv) Commercial Work
(a) At existing levels of manpower resources, to improve further the targetting and quality of Posts' services to exporters, monitored through the Quality Measurement System and the charging mechanism, and to increase further the quantity and quality of reporting of export opportunities.	Good progress has been made. Commercial Sections' work overseas, and the deployment of resources, are now guided and directed by the BOTB Forward Plan. The monitoring carried out under the Quality Measurement System has revealed that, over the last 15 months, customers' perception of the extent to which their needs were being met remained positive. The overall satisfaction rates for information, advice and promotion services, were consistently high during 1990.
(b) To ensure better focussed and targetted output by Commercial Sections overseas directed towards the targets and priorities set out in the BOTB Forward Plan.	High customer satisfaction borne out by demand for chargeable services, eg sales of market information enquiries increased by over 60 per cent. during the period April-November 1990; over 90 per cent. of the companies contacted would use the services again.
(v) Overseas Accommodation
(a) To reduce running costs on the overseas estate by £500,000 in 1990-91 by asset recycling.	Performance at 31 December 1990 suggests target of £500,000 will be met or exceeded.
(b) To reduce the level of furnishing stocks by 15 per cent. in the course of the 1990-91; and to achieve a saving in storage charges of £100,000.	Furnishing stock levels at 31 December 1990 indicated that the target will be achieved; that for savings on storage charges has already been met.
(c) To achieve 5 per cent. saving on cost of furnishings by direct purchase.	The FCO is currently in negotiation with a large number of contractors: but it is expected the £250,000 target will be met.
(d) To achieve savings on consultancy services, construction contracts and the purchase of goods of £250,000.	£250,000 savings figure had been achieved by 31 December 1990.
(vi) NGOS
British Council
(a) To reduce costs of the English language testing service by 55 per cent. between 1987-88 and 1991-92.	The target had been achieved by 31 December 1990. Total global surplus of £170,000 obtained in 1989-90. Forecast surplus for 1990-91 is £120,000.
(b) To reduce by 1993-94 annual global costs of provision of information to outside enquirers by 15 per cent. of the 1988-89 expenditure figure.	On target. Costs were reduced by £150,000 in 1989-90.
(c) To reduce telephone, telex and fax expenditure at headquarters by 5 per cent. per annum between 1989-90 and 1991-92.	Ahead of target. Reduction of 12 per cent. achieved in 1989-90; reduction of 10 per cent. forecast for 1990-91. Savings of £80,000 were produced in 1989-90.
(vii) Commonwealth Secretariat
(a) To find during 1991, in co-operation with other member governments of the Commonwealth, a cost effective solution to the Commonwealth Secretariat's accommodation problem and to press for an improved budgetting and management system for the Secretariat.	The Commonwealth Senior Officials' Meeting in November 1990 authorised the Secretariat to continue negotiations for the purchase of a second HQ building to accommodate their overspill staff. The meeting also introduced new programme budgetting procedures.
BBC World Service
(a) The BBC World Service has a number of performance measures and targets relating to efficiency, economy and effectiveness.	As at 31 December 1990, the BBC World Service was on course to meet all its targets for 1990-91 by 31 March 1991.

DEFENCE

The Gulf

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 29 January 1991 at column 504 to the hon. Member for Cunninghame, North (Mr. Wilson), if he will give the names and size of the ships chartered by Her Majesty's Government for use in the Gulf.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Although some information has been given in the past, in view of the current terrorist threat and the possibility of reprisals against those shipping companies willing to carry out work in support of British forces in the Gulf, I do not believe it would be prudent to provide further details. To date a total of 130 vessels have been chartered by Her Majesty's Government for use in the Gulf, of which seven have been British flagged.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his statement of 31 January, Official Report, columns 1108 and 1114, if he will now give consideration to the provision of call-time-limited free phone calls to the United Kingdom and Germany for service personnel in the Gulf.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We believe that the concession announced by my right hon. Friend on 31 January is the most equitable means of subsidising telephone calls made from the Gulf by service personnel. Cable and Wireless has recently announced a complementary scheme which aims to provide 100,000 £10 phone cards free over a two to three-month period.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Leisure Facilities

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much grant aid has been given towards the capital cost of district council recreation or leisure centres in each of the past 10 years; and if he will specify the council to which each grant was given.

Dr. Mawhinney: Grants by the Department of Education have been made as follows:

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what funds are available to assist district councils with the capital cost of leisure centre construction; and if he will make it his policy to fund those councils which have proceeded with schemes ahead of receiving grant aid.

Dr. Mawhinney: The funds made available by Government are determined from year to year in relation to the overall priorities of the Department of Education. In the current financial year funds have been made available to allow a start to be made on a sports hall facility at Dungannon.

Expenditure incurred by district councils which has not been approved by the Department of Education is not grant-aided retrospectively. It is not proposed to change this policy.

Councils may also apply for EC funding in support of capital development.

EC Funding

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much European Community funding has been granted to each Northern Ireland district council; and if he will list the schemes and show from which European Community fund the grant was made.

Mr. Needham: I have arranged for the information requested by the hon. Gentleman to be placed in the Library.

EMPLOYMENT

Adjudicated Decisions

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the relationship between information on adjudicated decisions contained in the chief adjudication officer's quarterly reports and clerical returns; and whether the series are compatible.

Mr. Jackson: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service executive agency are the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

Social Security Act 1989

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what research his Department is undertaking or has commissioned concerning the Social Security Act 1989; and when he expects the research to be published.

Mr. Jackson: My Department is presently undertaking research on the implementation of the actively seeking employment condition for benefit entitlement. A study on the perception of employers to this condition has also been commissioned from the Institute for Manpower Studies. It is not possible at this time to provide an indication of the timing of any publication.

SCOTLAND

Artistic Institutions

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the projects funded by his Department to help (a) musical, (b) theatre and (c) other artistic institutions and organisations in Scotland to make their activities easily available to low-income Scottish people.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The following projects, funded under the urban programme, aim to improve access to, and involvement in, the arts by communities in the worst deprived urban areas in Scotland.

Training

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how much money he intends to invest in Monklands for the purpose of job creation and training in 1991 to 1994;

(2) how much the Training Agency plans to invest in Lanarkshire in 1991 to 1994;

(3) how much money he intends to invest in Strathkelvin for the purpose of job creation and training in 1991 to 1994;

(4) how much the Training Agency plans to invest in Dumbartonshire in 1991 to 1994;

(5) what specific resources have been allocated by the Scottish Development Agency to Lanarkshire for the years 1991 to 1995.

Mr. Allan Stewart: In Scotland from 1 April 1991 Government resources for investment in economic development leading to the creation of jobs and for training will be devolved to Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise, working in conjunction with the local enterprise companies. These organisations will decide where such resources are to be invested. Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise are the successor bodies to the Training Agency and to the Scottish Development Agency and the Highlands and Islands Development Board.

Decisions about the allocation of resources for Lanarkshire and, within that area, for Monklands will be taken by Scottish Enterprise in conjunction with the relevant local enterprise company, Lanarkshire development agency. Similarly, such decisions in relation to Dumbartonshire and, within that area, Strathkelvin will be taken by Scottish Enterprise in conjunction with Dumbartonshire Enterprise Company.

Local Enterprise Companies

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what provision there is under the Scottish Enterprise legislation for each local enterprise company to collate monthly figures on unemployment in their areas.

Mr. Allan Stewart: None. The collation of unemployment figures remains the responsibility of the Employment Department.

Housing

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of eligible homes in Scotland currently have (a) cavity wall insulation, (b) 150mm of loft insulation, (c) thermostats on 50 per cent. or more radiator valves, (d) double glazing on 50 per cent. or more external windows, (e) compact fluorescent lighting in 50 per cent. or more light fittings, (f) gas condensing boilers and (g) floor insulation; and by when he forecasts that each of these figures will reach 75 per cent. and 90 per cent. of the eligible market.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not held centrally.

Blood Products

Mr. Bellotti: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration the Medicines Control Agency is giving to licensing the process made available to the Scottish national blood transfusion service to produce a higher potency factor VIII for the rest of the commercial plasma fractionation/supply industry in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Matters relating to the Medicines Control Agency are for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health.

An application for a licence for the production of higher potency factor VIII has not yet been submitted to the agency by the Scottish National Blood Transfusion Service, but it will do so soon. The intention is to produce a supply to meet the needs of Scottish patients.

Sports and Recreation

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the financial support given by his office to local authorities and schools to meet the needs of (a) physical education and (b) recreation in schools and communities in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Central Government support for local authority expenditure is not hypothecated to individual services.

GP Services

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the level of achievement against the targets set for childhood immunisation and cervical screening for each area of general practice as defined by the Jarman index.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is not available centrally in the form requested. However, data are available on the proportions of general medical practitioners in each health board area achieving the target levels for childhood immunisation and cervical screening; and this information as at 1 April 1990 is published in "Health Briefing No. 91/01/STA", a copy of which is available in the Library.

Health Boards

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report the names of the new members of Grampian health board to serve from 1 April.

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will name the non-executive members of the new health boards.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The names of those appointed as non-executive members of health boards with effect from 1 April 1991 are listed with their area of residence.

Cereals

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many farms produce cereals; and how many of these farms produce less than 75 acres of cereals per annum.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The June 1990 main agricultural census recorded that 13,208 farms in Scotland were growing cereals. Of those 8,273 were growing less than 30·3 hectares (75 acres) of cereals.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of pupils on the roll of each school involved in the assisted places schemes.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is set out in the table:

Stolen Equipment

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a list of the equipment stolen from his Department in the last three years for which information is available; and what was the approximate value of each item.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 11 February 1991]: A variety of minor items are periodically reported missing. The following more substantial items have been formally recorded since 1988 as losses to the Scottish Office which are attributable to theft.

Year	Item	Approximate value £
1988	Cash	400
1989	Motor car	2,000
1989	Furniture/machinery	3,800

Care

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is (a) the payment per resident from his Department to private nursing and or care homes and (b) the public expenditure per resident in local council care.

Miss Widdecombe: At May 1990, the latest date for which complete figures are available, the estimated average annual payment of income support to people in residential care and nursing homes was £6,719 per year.

Information regarding amounts of other social security benefits paid to people in residential care and nursing homes and information regarding amounts of any social security benefits paid to people in local authority residential accommodation is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

I understand from my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health that the available figures show that in 1988-89, the gross annual expenditure by local social service departments on residential care (excluding nursing home care) per supported resident aged 65 and over was £8,788. The net annual local authority expenditure was £5,980. The difference between gross and net is due to fees and charges, most of which are paid out of social security benefits.

War Pensions

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security where the full terms of the war pensions scheme are available; and if he will summarise them.

Miss Widdecombe: The full terms of the war pensions scheme are to be found in the Department's publication "War Pensions. The Statutes, Regulations, Rules and Orders as now in Force" a copy of which is available in the Library. The scheme provides for pensions where the disablement or death of a member of the armed forces is due to service; there are similar provisions for other groups such as members of the Merchant Navy. Allied provisions for members of the armed forces form part of the occupational pension scheme which is administered by the Ministry of Defence.

Pregnancy

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what steps he takes to monitor the financial, housing or social circumstances of pregnant girls aged under 18 years in the light of the higher risks faced by them and their babies;

(2) if he is monitoring the applications for income support made by pregnant girls under 18 years old; and if he will now make it his practice to grant such applications during the winter without any further requirements of severe hardship;

(3) how many pregnant girls under 18 years old and in the first six months of their pregnancy are receiving income support due to severe hardship; and what proportions of such applications are currently being granted.

Mr. Jack: All pregnant girls aged 16 or 17 years of age can get income support under normal rules for the 11 weeks prior to, and for six weeks after, their confinement. During the earlier stage of pregnancy they can get income support if they are incapable of work, but the remainder are guaranteed the offer of a youth training place. For those on youth training, training allowance replaces income support. The Secretary of State for Employment has taken measures to ease access to appropriate youth training provision for pregnant girls, the aim of which is to provide training relevant to their needs.

The severe hardship provisions within income support provide the necessary discretion to enable sensitive handling of such cases and for financial, housing and social circumstances to be taken into account, and there are no plans for making seasonal adjustments to the rules. Between 5 January 1991 and 8 February 1991, of 218 claims for income support by pregnant girls 162 (74 per cent.) were in need of income support under the severe hardship provisions.

Mobility Benefit

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the method by which his Department calculates the cost of extending entitlements to the mobility component to those aged over 65 years.

Mr. Scott: The estimate of the cost of extending entitlement to the higher rate mobility component of the disability living allowance to those over 65 was produced by looking at the numbers of people identified by OPCS who were over the age of 65 and not already getting mobility allowance who would meet the current qualifying conditions for mobility allowance were the age limit to be removed.

Therapeutic Work

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants of (a) invalidity benefit and (b) severe disablement allowance are taking advantage of the therapeutic earnings provisions; and what is the average weekly amount earned in both cases.

Mr. Scott: Information on the number of people claiming an incapacity benefit and receiving earnings for therapeutic work is not collected centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Similarly, information on the level of payment received is not collected centrally.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the number of persons within the Doncaster metropolitan borough area who are in receipt of attendance allowance.

Mr. Scott: The information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Income Support

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he has issued any additional guidance to his Department's offices in relation to making income support available to under 18-year-olds in view of the exceptionally cold weather;

(2) what monitoring he is undertaking of the number of applications made, and applications granted, for income support for under 18-year-olds due to severe hardship in the current exceptionally cold weather; and what figures he has collected.

Mr. Jack: All claims to income support from young people under 18 years of age which are not successful under normal rules are automatically referred for sympathetic consideration under the severe hardship provisions. All such claimants are automatically interviewed by staff who have been trained to recognise the needs of these particularly vulnerable young people. No further guidance was, therefore, necessary to cater for the exceptionally cold weather.

During the week commencing 4 February, 866 claims to income support were received from young people and directions for payment were made in 647 (75 per cent.) of them.

Social Fund

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many social fund loan applications were refused in each of his two Department's offices at Greenock and Port Glasgow in (a) 1989-90 and (b) 1990 to date due to perceived inability to repay; and what advice was given to those experiencing such a refusal.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 6 February 1991]: The table shows the number of applications recorded as refused on grounds of inability to repay. All letters notifying decisions advise applicants of their right to ask for a review and refer to the citizens advice bureau or a local law centre as a source of general advice. Money advice is normally offered to applicants discovered to be in financial difficulties, including such cases where an applicant is refused because of a perceived inability to repay.

PRIME MINISTER

The Gulf

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Prime Minister what communications he has had with King Hussein of Jordan since 6 February concerning the situation in the Gulf.

The Prime Minister: We are in continuing contact with the Jordanian Government. We have made clear our regret at King Hussein's misleading description of coalition objectives and activities in his 6 February speech to his people. I last communicated directly with King Hussein on 3 January, when I met him in London.

Saddam Hussein

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Prime Minister who was the last Minister to meet President Saddam Hussein; and what matters were discussed.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Putney (Mr. Mellor), the then Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, met President Saddam Hussein on 24 February 1988. A number of regional and bilateral issues were discussed.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 14 February.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Central and South America

Mr. Wray: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the (a) economic, (b) scientific, (c) technical, (d) environmental, and (e) social programmes which Her Majesty's Government have supported since 1989 in (i) Argentina, (ii) Brazil, (iii) Chile, (iv) Colombia, (v) Mexico, (vi) Panama, (vii) Peru, (viii) Venezuela and (ix) Uruguay.

Mrs. Chalker: I have been asked to reply.

We have no bilateral aid programmes for Argentina or Venezuela. We have technical co-operation programmes of varying sizes in the other seven countries. All these programmes concentrate on renewable natural resources (with a special emphasis on the sustainable use of the environment), English language teaching, and post-graduate training in Britain. Since July 1989 we have been building up a specifically environmental programme in Brazil.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Community Charge

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Norfolk, North (Mr. Howell) on 28 January, Official Report, column 391, if he will publish the uprated tables on transitional grants referred to in his answer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: These tables have now been published as tables 5.2 and 5.4 of the "Public Expenditure Analyses to 1993-94, Statistical Supplement to the 1990 Autumn Statement"—Cm 1520.

The changes as a result of the new community charge reduction scheme announced on 17 January were not included in these tables and are as follows:

	England	Scotland	Wales	Great Britain
Community charge reduction scheme 1991-92 (£ million)	1,695	90	62	1,847

These figures replace those for transitional relief given in the published tables.

Funding for the new scheme results in offsetting savings of some £300 million on community charge benefit.

Bingo Duty

Mr. Alexander To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Newark of 29 January, Official Report, column 466, how much of the £66 million bingo duty was paid by non-profit making members' clubs in the year ended 31 March 1990.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: In the year ended 31 March 1990, approximately £3 million was paid by these clubs.

TRANSPORT

Departmental Achievements

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the principal achievements of his Department since June 1987.

Mr. Rifkind: My Department has ensured that Britain's growing transport needs are met with regard to safety, efficiency and with proper respect for the environment.

Investment in transport infrastructure by both the public and private sectors has been greatly increased. British Rail's investment this year is over 50 per cent. higher in real terms than in 1986-87 and London Transport's is 85 per cent. higher; investment in national roads in England is 70 per cent. higher. Massive investment is already in progress to provide rail and road links to the channel tunnel from the day it opens. The Government's spending plans provide for further substantial increases in investment over the next few years, particularly in London Transport, British Rail and air traffic control.

The private sector also now has a greatly enhanced role in the provision of transport infrastructure, most notably in the channel tunnel, authorised by the 1987 Act, in roads and bridges such as the Dartford-Thurrock bridge, the second Severn bridge and the Birmingham northern relief road, and in airports such as BAA's new terminal at Stansted. The BAA was privatised in 1987 and the privatisation of the National Bus Company was completed in 1988.

The United Kingdom Government have been in the forefront of moves to achieve greater liberalisation in the provision of transport services in the European Community, where there has been considerable progress on aviation, road haulage and shipping, in international aviation, and in Britain's docks through the abolition of the dock labour scheme.

Transport safety is being enhanced through investment, regulation and publicity. We have approved British Rail's plans to spend £330 million for specific safety measures over the next three years—all that it asked for—and London Underground plans to invest approaching £400 million in further safety improvements over that period. Following a major review of road safety in 1987, the Government set a target of a one third reduction in road accident casualties by the year 2000. This is being implemented vigorously through legislation, including this Session's Road Traffic Bill, through low-cost road engineering schemes and through enhanced publicity campaigns under the safety on the move umbrella, notably on drinking and driving and child road safety. Numerous measures have been taken to improve ferry safety; and both aviation and maritime security are being tightened up, assisted by the new powers in the 1990 Act.

Stringent new European limits for vehicle emissions have been agreed, and unleaded petrol is rapidly supplanting leaded. Careful environmental assessments are undertaken for all national road schemes, and new roads are now being blended into the environment through more imaginative landscaping. More stringent limits on noise levels have been introduced for both road vehicles and aircraft.

Trust Ports

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library copies of the comments of the British Ports Federation submitted at the request of the then shipping minister on 9 November 1990 on the matter of trust ports privatisation and consultation.

Mr. McLoughlin: The meeting to which the hon. Lady refers was one of a regular series of discussions at ministerial level between the Department of Transport and the federation, which are not limited to trust ports privatisation and consultation. My noble Friend Lord Brabazon of Tara did not at that meeting request, nor did he subsequently receive, a statement on these topics from the federation.

Heathrow Airport

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, following receipt of Civil Aviation Authority report CAP578 on 22 January, he has commissioned any research into the number of spare slots at Heathrow airport.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Civil Aviation Authority noted in the consultation document it issued in November the number of unused slots at Heathrow in a busy week during summer 1990. More generally, the authority addressed the question of spare capacity at Heathrow in its advice last year on the United Kingdom's longer-term airport needs.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has asked the Civil Aviation Authority to undertake research into the implications of the recommendations of Civil Aviation Authority report CAP578 on the number of spare slots that would be applied for at Heathrow airport.

Mr. McLoughlin: No. The Civil Aviation Authority has advised in CAP578 that the effects of abolishing Heathrow rules one, two and three are unpredictable, in part because they must depend on decisions which might be taken by foreign airlines on whether to seek to mount services at Heathrow.

London Transport

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will make a statement on the financial position of London Transport.

Mr. Rifkind: The Government have had discussions with London Transport about the financial difficulties it has encountered in 1990-91. The Government have concluded that the appropriate course is to increase London Transport's external financing limit for 1990-91 by £55 million. At the same time, an increase of £7·55 million is necessary to cover London Transport's expenditure in the current year on east-west crossrail, and costs associated with safeguarding the Chelsea-Hackney line proposal. These increases will change London Transport's 1990-91 EFL from £448·00 million to £510·55 million. This is within the forecast outturn for the planning total published in the statistical supplement to the 1990 autumn statement.

Urgent discussions with London Transport are continuing, about their budget for 1991-92. Pending the outcome of those discussions, London Transport's EFL and capital expenditure ceilings will remain at the levels previously announced.

Dial-a-Ride Service

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what arrangements have been made to fund the London dial-a-ride service.

Mr. Freeman: I am pleased to announce that the grant to London dial-a-ride services for 1991-92 will be £10·015 million, an increase of over £1·7 million on 1990-91. It has been most encouraging to see the rapid expansion of the scheme in recent years and I am confident that this latest injection of cash will allow London Transport to increase the services still further in 1991-92 by an estimated 60,000 journeys—equivalent to an increase of 9 per cent.—and also to proceed with the first stages of their planned reorganisation.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Plant Classification

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he has for projects to help the consistent classification of plants, as proposed by Dr. Martin Holdgate FRS at the nature conservancy conference on 31 January.

Mrs. Chalker: We are studing Dr. Holdgate's proposal within the context of our overall assistance to developing countries on environmental issues, including biodiversity, and requests from them.

Famine Relief

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what criteria are used to determine whether Hercules aircraft are used for famine relief.

Mrs. Chalker: Aircraft of any type are used as a last resort in famine relief operations, due to their limited load capacity and extremely high operating costs. Where sea or ground transport cannot be used, however, airlifts are recognised as an alternative means of delivering food. In such operations Hercules aircraft have advantages in operating into short or inaccessible airstrips.

Somalia

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on diplomatic relations with Somalia.

Mrs. Chalker: The British embassy in Mogadishu was closed and staff withdrawn in early January because of the complete breakdown in law and order. Since the United Kingdom maintains diplomatic relations with states rather than governments, there has been no breach in relations. We keep in regular contact with the Somali ambassador in London as well as with representatives of the various Somali groups.

ENVIRONMENT

Property Services Agency

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what estimate he has of the total value of Crown business so far lost by the Property Services Agency through competitive tendering by Government Departments;

(2) how many Crown tenders the Property Services Agency has competed for and how many has it won in competition since Crown customers were untied.

Mr. Yeo: The PSA has submitted competitive bids for some 200 separate commissions since Departments were untied. The extent to which these were successful is commercially sensitive information for the PSA businesses, which it would be inappropriate to disclose, but PSA has been successful in a sizeable proportion. The market testing has provided a powerful stimulus to efficiency, and Departments will have benefited from keener prices.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment by what date he now expects the Property Services Agency to operate on commercial accounts.

Mr. Yeo: PSA Services—PSAS—already produces, for management use, monthly income and expenditure accounts. The implementation of new commercial financial systems is well advanced and as they are introduced they are running in parallel with cash accounting for the Vote. PSAS will continue to operate on the basis of cash accounting until it ceases to be a Government Department.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the salary cost, including pay bonuses and compensation paid on termination of contract, of the Property Services Agency board members in the period January 1990 to January 1991.

Mr. Yeo: The salary cost of the executive members of the PSAS board for the 1990 calendar year was £680,100. The non-executive members received fees amounting to £23,904 in the same year.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many performance pay bonuses have been awarded to Property Services Agency board members in the period 1 January 1990 to 1 January 1991; and what was the total cost of those bonuses.

Mr. Yeo: During the 1990 calendar year three performance pay bonuses totalling £11,468 were awarded to Property Services Agency board members. The salaries of a further three board members included an element of performance pay totalling £8,538 as a result of awards made in previous years.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he expects compulsory redundancies among employees of the Property Services Agency Government-owned companies.

Mr. Yeo: The Property Services Agency hopes to achieve most of its required manpower reduction by voluntary means, but some compulsory redundancies will be inevitable.

Non-domestic Rates

Mr. Richard Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all those local authorities whose non-domestic rate poundage rose by less than 10·9 per cent. in 1985-86, 1986-87, 1987-88, 1988-89 and 1989-90.

Mr. Portillo: I am arranging for copies of the information to be placed in the Library of the House.

Rates, Kent

Mr. Cambell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the average rates bill in 1989-90 for each local authority in Kent.

Mr. Key: The information requested is as follows:

Ashford	452
Canterbury	420
Dartford	402

Dover	372
Gillingham	391
Gravesham	441
Maidstone	433
Rochester on Medway	376
Sevenoaks	474
Shepway	475
Swale	340
Thanet	425
Tonbridge and Malling	438
Tunbridge Wells	435

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he has given to the provision of assistance by his Department at the end of military conflict in the Gulf in safely packaging the radioactively contaminated rubble and radioactive waste arising from the Iraqi nuclear facilities destroyed by allied bombing.

Mr. Trippier: Her Majesty's Government will give consideration to provision of such assistance, if so requested, following the end of current hostilities.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Richard Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the credit approvals of each local authority in England for 1990-91 and 1991-92, showing the percentage change between the two years.

Mr. Portillo: A list of the basic credit approvals issued to local authorities in England for 1991-92 was placed in the House of Commons Library on 4 January 1991. I am arranging for a further list to be placed in the Library giving, for each authority, basic credit approvals for 1990-91 and 1991-92 and showing the percentage changes between the two years.

Mr. Richard Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the annual capital guideline of each local authority in England for 1990-91 and 1991-92, showing the percentage change between the two years.

Mr. Portillo: Annual capital guidelines—ACGs—for local authorities in England are issued by the Secretary of State responsible for each service block. My Department is responsible for issuing ACGs in respect of the housing and other services blocks—OSB. I am arranging for two lists to be placed in the Library giving, for each authority, the 1990-91 and 1991-92 ACGs for housing and OSB respectively and showing the percentage change between the two years.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations his Department has received from the Audit Commission concerning the pursuit of non-payers of poll tax through the courts; and whether he has any plans to offer additional moneys to magistrates courts to cover such cases.

Mr. Key: The Audit Commission produced a report in November 1990 on the administration of the community charge. Among other things, it suggested to authorities that they should liaise closely with clerks to magistrates courts in order to ensure that community charge cases are handled satisfactorily and in appropriate numbers. We have warmly welcomed this report and strongly commended its findings to local authorities. In January the Audit Commission's paper for the local government review suggested that authorities are now able to issue more summonses but court time remains inadequate in most authorities. On the question of magistrates courts funding I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by the Minister of State, Home Department, my right hon. Friend the Member for Oxford, West and Abingdon (Mr. Patten), to the hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) on 13 February, Official Report, column 492.

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much of the £1·7 billion funding available for the community charge reduction scheme is to be allocated to (a) Blackburn, (b) Hyndburn and (c) Burnley; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: This information is not yet available. The amount of reduction scheme grant a charging authority receives will depend on the personal community charge that it sets for 1991-92 and the number of eligible people in its area. Claims for community charge reduction scheme grant will be requested shortly.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his Department's latest estimate of local authority spending on collecting the poll tax.

Mr. Key: The English local authorities budgeted to spend £440·2 million on collecting the community charge in 1990-91.

Community Charge, Kent

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what was the average level of community charge for each local authority in the Kent area for two adult person households;

(2) what was the average level of community charge for each local authority in the Kent area for three adult person households.

Mr. Key: In 1990-91 each adult, unless a student or exempted, would be liable for a full personal community charge less, depending on personal circumstances, amounts for transitional relief and community charge rebate. The following table, using information returned by the local authorities, shows the estimated average community charge and the average charge after reliefs and rebates.

	Average charge £	Average charge after transitional relief and community charge benefit £
Ashford	299	267
Canterbury	300	256

Private Rented Accommodation

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on progress in reviving the private rented sector since the passage of the Housing Act 1988.

Mr. Yeo: It is too early to assess the overall impact of the Act on private renting. Research now in progress will provide information in the course of 1991. There are, however, clear signs of increased activity in the residential lettings market. In particular, it is estimated that business expansion scheme companies have so far raised £580 million, which will provide over 10,000 new homes to rent.

Leisure Centres

Sir Ian Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will publish a table listing the total capital expenditure on leisure centres and swimming baths by local authorities in the last five years for which detailed information is available.

Mr. Portillo: Following is the information:

Year	Leisure centres	Swimming pools
1984-85	107·914	35·429
1985-86	63·998	25·534
1986-87	76·687	34·672
1987-88	87·783	51·056
1988-89	105·223	51·311

Figures are shown in £ million.

NB: For the years 1987-88 and 1988-89 the figures for leisure centres include expenditure on indoor sports and community centres; for the years 1984-85, 1985-86 and 1986-87 data were collected under the heading sports and recreation centres.

Home Repair Grants

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the latest figures, by quarter, for the number of (a) applications and (b) approvals of the various grants for home renovation and repair (i) since June 1990 and (ii) for the eight quarters ending in June 1990.

Mr. Yeo: The Local Government and Housing Act 1989 changed the system of renovation grants to private owners and tenants in England from 1 July 1990. Under the new system the Department collects information about grant applications approved and final payments made. Information about grant approvals under the new system during the third quarter of 1990 are shown in the table. Figures for the fourth quarter of 1990 are not yet available. The previous system of grants to private owners and tenants ended at 30 June 1990. Grant applications and approvals under the old system up to and including the first quarter of 1990 are shown in table 2.16 of "Housing and Construction Statistics Part 2" June 1990. A copy of this publication is in the Library.

Rubbish Collection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his Department's latest estimate of local authority spending on rubbish collection.

Mr. Key: The English local authorities budgeted to spend £476·9 million on refuse collection in 1990-91.

Customer Services Committees

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the current payment to those chairing customer services committees; and what proposals he has to increase these payments.

Mr. Trippier: The remuneration of the chairmen of the customer service committees is a matter for the Director General of Water Services to determine with the approval of the Treasury.

Plant Protection

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has for representation at the fourth international parks conference at Caracas in 1992, in relation to protection of areas of plant communities, as proposed by Dr. Rodwell of Lancaster university.

Mr. Baldry: I understand that the fourth world congress on national parks and protected areas will include discussions on the classification and monitoring of vegetation. The International union for the Conservation of Nature and Natural Resources, as organisers of the congress, is considering inviting Dr. Rodwell to participate in these discussions.

Caravan Sites

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will respond to the Countryside Commission's proposal for certain caravan sites to be removed from heritage coastlines.

Mr. Trippier: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment is aware that the Countryside Commission published a policy statement on heritage coasts last month and that the commission intends to seek his views on it in due course.

Residential Homes

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to enable local authorities to establish companies or trusts to run residential homes for the elderly; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: Local authorities already have powers to promote the formation of societies, trusts or companies for these and other purposes under the Housing Associations Act 1985.

Sleeping Rough

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) which voluntary organisations carried out the survey of people sleeping rough in London referred to by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary on 8 January, Official Report, column 543; and on what date the survey was conducted;

(2) if he will provide a borough-by-borough breakdown of the 1,046 people sleeping rough in London quoted by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary on 8 February, Official Report, column 543;

(3) whether the Metropolitan police took part in the survey of people sleeping rough in London referred to by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary on 8 January, Official Report, column 543.

Sir George Young: The estimate of 1,046 people sleeping rough in central London quoted by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary was drawn from estimates made by the voluntary organisations listed in the table. These estimates were made at the end of January in relation to seven areas in central London in which the main concentrations of rough sleepers are found. The voluntary organisations are in regular contact with the Metropolitan police but they did not consult the police on these estimates.

The estimates for the seven areas were as follows; it is not possible to analyse them on a borough-by-borough basis:

	Number
Strand and West End	130
Victoria and Vauxhall	300
Earl's Court and Hammersmith Broadway	56
The "Bullring" and Waterloo	120
The City	130
Lincoln's Inn Fields and Kingsway	210
King's Cross	100

The voluntary organisations that took part in the estimates were:

Salvation Army
Beacon House
Providence Row Housing Association
East London Homeless Primary Care Team
Look Ahead Housing Association
City Social Services
St. Botolph's Day Centre
Thamesreach
Church Housing Association
Roman Catholic Chaplaincy for the Homeless
King's Cross Homelessness Project
Camden Homeless Monitoring Group
New Horizon
Shaftesbury Society
St. Mongo's Association
North Lambeth Day Centre
De Paul Trust
Vauxhall Action for the Homeless in the Community
The Passage Day Centre
St. Vincent Centre
The Cardinal Hume Centre
Streetwise Youth
The Basement Project
The Joint Homelessness Team
—Westminster Social Services

Community Forests

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to establish further community forests; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: As part of their joint initiative to develop a programme of community forests near major conurbations, the Countryside Commission and Forestry Commission have announced nine new candidate sites. The locations are Bedford, Bristol, Cleveland, Manchester, Merseyside, Nottingham, south Hertfordshire, South Yorkshire and Swindon. As the next step, the Government have authoritised the commissions to propose to their local authority partners the appointment of project teams for each area. These teams, consulting closely with interested parties, will draw up detailed plans as the basis for deciding future action. Such plans are already in preparation for three other sites: the Forest of Mercia—south Staffordshire; the Great North Forest—south Tyneside and north-east Durham; and Thames Chase—to the east of London. The further areas bring the total programme proposed to 12 forests, spread throughout England.

US Service Men

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will pay the grant to parishes in respect of resident United States service men, announced on 3 May 1990.

Mr. Portillo: Claims by parishes for a one-off grant, payable exceptionally for 1990-91, in respect of resident US service men who are exempt from the community charge have now been assessed. A list showing determinations of grant for each eligible parish has been placed in the Library.

Homelessness

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, if he will make a statement on the recent initiatives taken by his Department to help relieve the plight of the homeless.

Mr. Yeo [pursuant to the reply, 30 January 1991, c. 535.]: I am today placing in the Library a list of 78 voluntary organisations to which we are offering grants for 1991-92. In all, over £4·5 million will be available for specific projects providing practical help for homeless people and for the second phase of the national homelessness advice service coordinated through citizens' advice bureaux with support from Shelter and the London Housing Aid Centre. This represents an increase of over 100 per cent. of the £2 million available in 1990-91. The extra money has made it possible for us to help a much larger number of voluntary organisations, most of them outside London. The grants are a recognition of the vital role which these organisations play in relieving the problems experienced by the homeless and in encouraging them towards independent living.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will indicate the total amount of public money allocated to the London Docklands development corporation for each year since 1981, at current prices, indicating for each year what proportion the figure is in relation to total allocation for urban development corporations, and the proportion in relation to the urban block.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 11 February 1991]: Information on public expenditure totals is as follows:

Urban block public expenditure
£ million—outturn prices

	LDDC external financing limits	All UDCs external financing limits	LDDC as percentage of all UDCs	[1]Urban block total	LDDC as percentage of block
1981-82	31	38	82	162	19

[1] Includes for 1984-85 onwards other Government Departments' contributions to the Urban Programme.
[2] LDDC and Merseyside were the only UDCs until February 1987. Four second generation UDCs were set up in 1987 in England and the four third generation UDCs in 1988-89.
[3] Includes City Action teams, transferred from DTI during 1989-90.
[4] Current provision.

Industrial Relocation

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans for environmental grants for new buildings to encourage industrial relocation out of residential urban areas.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 11 February 1991]: I have no such plans, but urban development corporations have powers to offer a range of grants to businesses relocating in their areas. Environmental improvement is a key element of such redevelopment.

Refuse-derived Fuel

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Thurrock, Official Report, 29 January, columns 472-73, if he will make it his policy to (a) consult the private sector on the best use of the powers of derogation and (b) ensure that all legislation and regulations ultimately controlled by his Department encourage both the development and use of refuse-derived fuels as an economically viable commodity and do not add to its cost in the medium term.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 12 February 1991]: As regards consultation, I refer my hon. Friend to my reply of 21 January, Official Report, column 87. The Government's policy is to encourage the recycling and productive use of waste, where possible, but I am not in a position to give general assurances of the kind sought about the effect of legislation for which my Department is responsible.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Parole

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to be able to announce his decision in relation to the parole board's recommendation in the case of Dennis Stafford.

Mrs. Rumbold: Mr. Stafford has already been notified of this decision.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many scientific procedures were carried out on animals in (a) England, (b) Wales and (c) Scotland in 1989;

(2) what response he has made to the criticisms contained within the RSPCA/FRAME report on the use of non-human primates as laboratory animals in Britain; and whether he has any plans to implement its main recommendations;

(3) how the likely benefits of a procedure are assessed when considering a project licence application under section 5(4) of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986; whether any assessment is made concerning how useful the product to be tested will be once marketed; and how project licences issued for the testing of cosmetics have been justified under this section.

Mrs. Rumbold: I have nothing to add to the replies which I gave to similar questions from the hon. Member on 11 December, at columns 348-49.

Refugees

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he intends to take to ensure that asylum-seekers are granted comprehensive advice on asylum procedures and information on agencies and refugee community organisations upon their arrival in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Government provide 25 per cent. of the funding of the refugee unit of the United Kingdom immigration advisory service for the purpose of advising asylum seekers in the United Kingdom. I am satisfied that the present arrangements for informing asylum seekers of the advice available from the United Kingdom immigration advisory service are adequate.

Public Order Act

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has completed his evaluation of section 39 of the Public Order Act 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Wolverhampton, North-East (Mrs. Hicks) on 6 February 1991, at column 141.

Bail Hostels

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consultations were undertaken by the probation service with the residents of Elworth prior to the recent submission of an application to open a bail hostel within the village.

Mr. John Patten: I understand that Cheshire probation service began consultation with local residents after the planning application was submitted to Congleton borough council but before the formal planning committee meeting on 4 December 1990 when planning permission was refused.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many offences were committed by individuals resident in bail hostels at the time of the offence in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. John Patten: The information is not recorded centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the criteria upon which potential sites for bail hostels are assessed by the probation service.

Mr. John Patten: Local probation services assess potential sites for bail hostels on the basis of a range of factors such as the level of unmet demand for bail places in the surrounding area; the availability of suitable properties in terms of size, price and ease of management; the proximity of amenities and public transport links; the general character of the area and the likelihood of planning consent being granted.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will visit the village of Elworth to meet local residents to discuss the proposal to site a bail hostel in the village.

Mr. John Patten: The role of the Home Office in these matters is confined to approval of proposals that new hostels should be set up and their funding. It falls to local probation committees to choose the particular sites, negotiate purchases, consult the neighbours and apply for the relevant planning consents. I understand that Cheshire probation service is already discussing its proposal to site a bail hostel in Elworth with local residents and representatives. I hope that discussions can continue on this basis.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration is given by the probation service to the proximity of primary schools when assessing potential sites for use as bail hostels.

Mr. John Patten: The proximity of a primary school or schools may be one of many factors which local probation services need to consider when assessing a potential site for use as a bail hostel.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration is given by the probation service to the proximity of clubs and societies for senior citizens when assessing potential sites for use as bail hostels.

Mr. John Patten: The proximity of such clubs or societies may be one of many factors which local probation services may need to consider when assessing a site for use as a bail hostel.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration is given by the probation service to local employment opportunities for inmates when assessing potential sites for use as bail hostels.

Mr. John Patten: Unemployed bailees can experience difficulty in finding local jobs because the average period of residence on bail is only a few weeks. In general terms, the local probation service would, therefore, look first of all for good public transport links so that hostel residents already in work could, wherever possible, retain their existing employment.

Prisons (Farm Land)

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a table showing, in respect of each prison establishment listed in appendix 3 to the report of the work of the prison service April 1989 to March 1990, the acreage of farm land attached to it.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information is as follows:

Establishment	Acres
Blantyre House	2
Blundeston	15
Buckley Hall	76
Bullwood Hall	14
Camp Hill	198
Channings Wood	14

Annual Report Costs

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much the Home Office annual report 1991 cost to produce and distribute.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The costs of printing, publishing and distribution were borne by Her Majesty's Stationery Office which aims to recover its costs from sales revenue.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Higher Education

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many educational institutions had (a) not set criteria for payment of access funds and (b) not paid out access funds by 31 December 1990.

Mr. Alan Howarth: These are matters for the institutions concerned. The information is not held centrally.

Nursery Education

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what advice his Department gives to those local education authorities who are considering charging for nursery education.

Mr. Eggar: Under Section 106 of the Education Reform Act 1988, charges cannot be made for admission to maintained schools or for education provided for registered pupils at maintained schools during school hours.

Inner-city Sport

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the reasons for the delay in publishing a clear and comprehensive statement of the Government's overall objectives for sport and recreation in inner-city areas; and when such a statement will be published.

Mr. Atkins: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on 5 February 1991, Official Report, column 131.

Students

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science which colleges of higher education have expressed opposition to the implementation of top-up fees for students in their institutions.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The setting of fees is properly for individual higher education institutions. Information is not collected about their views on appropriate fee levels.

Child Abuse

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Fallon), first met Ms. Esther Rantzen to discuss child abuse; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, when he first met Ms. Esther Rantzen to discuss child abuse; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: My officials and I met Ms. Rantzen on 26 November, not in October, as alleged in an article in The People, dated 10 February. She told us of some material which she thought might warrant investigation. It was not until 20 December we had sufficient material from her office to investigate. Any allegation of this kind relating to teachers' misconduct is investigated urgently and thoroughly.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Beer

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on the supply of beer will apply to Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: In its report on the supply of beer in the United Kingdom published on 21 March 1989 the Monopolies and Mergers Commission looked at the market in Northern Ireland. The commission noted that the markets in Scotland and Northern Ireland differed in some respects from those in England and Wales, but that in others were similar. The commission concluded that the characteristics of those markets were not so different as to warrant separate regulation. The Supply of Beer Orders made following the report therefore apply equally to Northern Ireland and Scotland as to other parts of the United Kingdom.

Rugby

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will refer to the Director General of Fair Trading the question of interference by the English Rugby Football Union with the commercial activities of individual English international players.

Mr. Redwood: I have no plans to do so. It does not seem to me that these matters are capable of being dealt with under the competition legislation for which the Director General of Fair Trading is responsible.

Film Industry

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the basis used to calculate the current funding for British film screen finance.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 11 February 1991]: The current Government grant for British Screen Finance Limited—BSF—was set after discussions with the company about the level of funding required to administer its support schemes for feature film production, short films and script development. The £2 million annual grant announced in July 1989 by the then Secretary of State for three years from 1991 also took account for the loans received from BSF's private sector shareholders.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the name and date of appointment of each Minister within his Department who has had responsibility for the British film industry since 1979.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 12 February 1991]: The names of the Ministers who have had responsibility for film policy since 1979 and the dates on which they were first appointed to the Department are as follows:

Baroness Oppenheim-Barnes (4 May 1979), right hon. Norman Tebbit (7 May 1979), right hon. Kenneth Baker (5 January 1981), Lord Trefgarne (5 August 1981), Iain Sproat (30 September 1981), right hon. Norman Lamont (30 September 1981), John Butcher (6 April 1982), right hon. Sir Geoffrey Pattie (10 September 1984), Robert Atkins (15 August 1987), Eric Forth (25 July 1988) and Lord Hesketh (23 July 1990).

Responsibility for film policy does not necessarily coincide with the date of appointment to the Department.

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will make it his policy that advice and counselling for civil servants employed by ECGD on their future career options should be provided from sources outside that department.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 12 February 1991]: ECGD staff are able to seek advice and counselling on career matters within the Department in the usual way. They are also free to seek advice from other sources if they wish.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what arrangements he has made to provide advice and counselling for civil servants employed within the ECGD, and in particular those in the insurance services group, on their future career options in the light of Government's policy to privatise the ECGD.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 12 February 1991]: The ECGD has provided all its staff with a summary of their existing terms and conditions of employment, including pensions, to help them compare the terms and conditions which will be offered by the prospective owners of the privatised company. The ECGD has also arranged a series of career decision workshops to help staff in their approach to the issues involved in decisions about their future careers. When the private sector terms and conditions on offer are known, the Government Actuary's department will express a view about their compliance with the requirements of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 and this will be transmitted to staff. All ECGD staff are, of course, able to take advantage of the Department's normal facilities for career guidance and counselling.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

NATO Science Programme

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much money the Foreign Office has contributed towards the NATO science programme in each of the last 10 years; and if he has any plans to stop this contribution.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The NATO science programme is a co-operative international programme for advancing the frontiers of civil science through high-level basic research. It benefits all members of the alliance. It has recently increased its links with scientists in central and eastern Europe and the Soviet Union. Figures for the overall programme and the United Kingdom contribution in the last 10 years are as follows:

	Total NATO science programme budget in Belgian francs	United Kingdom share in per cent. (paid by FCO)	United Kingdom share in Belgian francs
1980	423,500,000	19·50	82,582,500
1981	507,000,000	19·50	98,865,000
1982	575,000,000	19·50	112,125,000
1983	712,000,000	19·50	138,840,000
1984	778,000,000	18·82	146,419,000
1985	818,000,000	18·82	153,947,600
1986	854,000,000	18·82	160,722,800
1987	871,000,000	18·82	163,922,200
1988	905,000,000	18·82	170,321,000
1989	932,500,000	18·82	175,496,500
1990	970,000,000	18·82	182,554,000

We have no plans to stop the United Kingdom contribution to the NATO science programme.

HEALTH

Embryology Authority

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects the embryology authority to assume its full powers and commence its work.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority started work when the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act received Royal Assent in November last year. The authority is currently planning the arrangements which need to be in place by the time it assumes its full powers and commences licensing.

I announced today in my speech to the Interim Licensing Authority's annual meeting for infertility treatment centres and ethics committees, that an order will be laid shortly which will enable the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority to assume its full powers on 1 August this year.

Cancelled Operations

Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many operations have been cancelled in national health service hospitals during the current financial year.

Mr. Dorrell: In the year ending 31 March 1990 provisional figures show that an estimated 315,000 operations did not take place at the originally appointed time. During that year the national health service completed 8·6 million in-patient and day-patient treatments—an increase of 3 per cent. over the previous year and 30 per cent. over 1979.

Blood Products

Mr. Bellotti: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information the Medicines Control Agency has on the import of unlicensed high purity factor VIII products for the treatment of haemophilia A patients.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Under the provisions of the Medicines Act 1968 a medicinal product cannot normally be imported for use with patients except under the authority of a product licence, a clinical trial certificate or under the clinical trial exemption scheme. The Medicines Control Agency holds licensing records in respect of all such products. There are, however, certain circumstances under which medicinal products may be imported without the above authority.

Medical and dental practitioners may import unlicensed medicinal products in order to perform their own clinical trials. In these cases the practitioner must notify the licensing authority by means of the doctors and dentists exemption scheme. The Medicines Control Agency maintains records of all such notifications.

A United Kingdom company may import an unlicensed product which is required by a doctor for a particular patient, under SI No. 673, the Medicines (Exemption from Licences) Importation Order 1984. The company is required to notify the licensing authority prior to each importation.

All information concerning licence and other applications, including notifications, is held in confidence by the Medicines Control Agency in accordance with section 118 of the Act.

Medical and dental practitioners may also import unlicenced products for administration to particular patients—"named patient" supply. Under the terms of this exemption the practitioner is not required to notify the Licensing authority. As a consequence the Medicines Control Agency does not maintain centralised records of this type of supply.

Mr. Bellotti: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to visit the bio products laboratory; what plans he has for its privatisation; what is the cost of the laboratory to the national health service; and what charges it makes to health authorities for human blood and blood-derived products.

Mr. Dorrell: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health will visit the bio products laboratory on 11 March. The planned visit is a routine one. There are no plans to privatise the laboratory.

The aggregate cost of the bio products laboratory to the NHS is not separately identified. The bio products laboratory supplies products derived from human blood and the charges are shown in the table. These charges do not include any element for the freely donated blood from which the products are derived. The prices paid by the health authorities are not necessarily those shown in the table as there are volume related discounts for some product lines.

Mental Illness

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how the capital and revenue savings obtained from the running down and disposal of large-scale mental health hospitals are transferred from health authorities to social service authorities for the expansion of community care services and facilities for the resettlement of discharged patients.

Mr. Dorrell: The resources released by the closure and disposal of psychiatric hospitals are mainly redeployed for the development of community based mental health services. A mechanism exists for the transfer of such resources to local authorities in order to develop social care services through the dowry system described in circular HC(83)6/LAC(83)5, a copy of which is in the Library. Dowries are predominantly used for the resettlement of patients from mental handicap hospitals.

Fluoride

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what advice his Department has received concerning dangers to health arising from the use of fluoridated toothpaste in areas where the level of fluoride in the water has been raised to 1 part per million;

(2) what advice his Department has received concerning the risk of discolouration of teeth where fluoridated toothpaste is used in areas where the level of fluoride in the water has been raised to 1 part per million;

(3) whether his Department monitors the effect of fluoridated toothpaste and other freely available fluoride additives in areas where the level of fluoride in the water has been raised to 1 part per million;

(4) what guidance he has given to dentists, hospitals, the retail trade and other affected groups about the sale and use of fluoridated toothpaste in areas where the level of fluoride in the water has been raised to 1 part per million.

Mr. Dorrell: The total daily oral intake of fluoride from food, water and fluoridated toothpaste in those areas in the United Kingdom where the drinking water contains fluoride at 1 part per million, whether present naturally or added, is too low to have any adverse effect on health.

A study to compare the effect on enamel formation of the use of fluoride toothpaste in fluoridated Birmingham and non-fluoridated Leeds concluded that while there was a higher level of mild fluorosis in the fluoridated area there was no evidence of an increase in the higher grades of fluorosis, and that the use of fluoride toothpaste by young children in fluoridated areas was unlikely to produce aesthetically unacceptable levels of enamel fluorosis.

Not all toothpastes are licensed medicinal products. The EC cosmetics directive permits the addition of fluoride ion up to 1,500 ppm. No toothpaste on the United Kingdom market contains more than this and most are limited to 1,000 ppm. A voluntary agreement has been reached with the Cosmetics, Toiletries, and Perfumeries Association to include information on packaging about the amount of toothpaste to be used when cleaning teeth. A toothpaste containing more than 1,500 ppm would only be available on prescription.

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence his Department has of a level of ingestion at which sodium fluoride becomes carcinogenic; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department has no evidence that shows sodium fluoride to be carcinogenic at any level of ingestion.

The Committee on the Carcinogenicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment—COC—reviewed the animal data on the carcinogenicity of sodium fluoride in 1990. The only noteworthy finding was a statistically significant dose-related positive trend for the incidence of osteosarcomas in one strain of male rats which was observed in one carcinogenicity study. No osteosarcomas were found in female rats in the same study, or in mice in a parallel study. A further study in another strain of rats showed no evidence of neoplastic effects.

The COC noted that all well conducted in vivo mutagenicity tests were negative; that limited epidemiological data revealed no relationship between bone cancer rates in humans and fluoride concentrations in drinking water; and that there was no available evidence that fluoride causes bone cancers in humans, even in people in whom excessive long-term exposure to fluoride has caused skeletal fluorosis. It concluded that there was no evidence for carcinogenic risk to humans from exposure to fluoride.

Local Government Responsibilities

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he is reconsidering plans for the implementation of the National Health Service and Community Care Act in relation to the roles and responsibilities of local government after April 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister gave the hon. Member for Monklands, West (Mr. Clarke) on 12 February at column 731.

Staff Accommodation

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what status residential accommodation in hospitals used by NHS staff will have once Crown immunity is lifted from NHS property on 1 April.

Mr. Dorrell: From 1 April all lettings of National Health Service staff residential accommodation will be subject to the relevant housing legislation. Staff who already occupy NHS residential accommodation will be offered new tenancy or licence agreements as appropriate.

Residential Homes

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will provide grant aid to local authorities to enable them to improve residential homes for the elderly to meet the statutory requirements laid down by Parliament; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is for local authorities, having determined their priorities, to make provision from their annual capital guidelines—ACGs—other receipts and transfers from revenue funds for any improvements which they consider necessary to their residential homes for the elderly. For 1991-92, ACGs of £98 million have been issued to local authorities for the personal social services, an increase of £13 million on 1990-91.

Electoral Statistics

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the total number of electors registered in each parliamentary constituency in England and Wales for 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91; and if he will list the percentage changes that have taken place in each case compared with the previous year's figures.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

Health Expenditure

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was (a) total United Kingdom expenditure on health and (b) Government expenditure on health, expressing both as a percentage of GNP, in each of the last 20 years.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 8 February 1991]: The table shows total United Kingdom expenditure on health and total public spending on health since 1970. It expresses each as a proportion of gross domestic product, rather than gross national product. GDP has been used in this presentation for the sake of consistency with other sources of information on public spending such as the autumn statement and the Budget report.

Total United Kingdom and total Government spending on health as a proportion of GDP 1970-1989

NHS Costs

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average cost per consultant appointment in the last year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 11 February 1991]: Financial returns submitted by district health authorities in England show the average cost per out-patient attendance as £24·86 for 1988-89, and £26·98—provisional figure—for 1989-90. These figures are average for all specialties, and cover direct consultation-treatment costs only.

Health Services, Kent

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for each parliamentary constituency in Kent, what percentage of the population are (a) owner-occupiers and (b) local authority tenants according to the most recent information updated since the 1981 census.

Mr. Yeo: I have been asked to reply.

There is no more recent information for parliamentary constituencies than the 1981 census. Estimates of the number of dwellings owned by four sectors—local authority, other public sector, housing association and private—are provided by local authorities for their areas in the annual housing investment programme returns. These are in the Library. They do not however provide a breakdown of the privately owned dwellings between owner-occupied and rented.

ENERGY

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his expectation of the rise in carbon dioxide emission levels by the year 2005 and the reasons for it; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Projections prepared by the Government in 1989 and published in 1990 in energy paper 58, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House, suggested that Britain's emissions of carbon dioxide into the atmosphere from all sources might be in the range of 178 million to 225 million tonnes of carbon —mtc—by 2005 if no action to control them were taken. These compared with emissions in 1989 of about 160 mtc. This range reflects the assumptions used in energy paper 58 for economic growth, energy prices, and so on.

The White Paper "This Common Inheritance" noted certain developments which had taken place since the publication of energy paper 58 which might affect emissions levels. These were a change in the projected level of new nuclear capacity, which would tend to increase emissions, and an expected increase in the use of gas for electricity generation purposes, which would tend to reduce them.

The Government have announced that Britain is prepared, if other countries take similar action, to set itself the demanding target of returning emissions of carbon dioxide to 1990 levels by 2005.

Coal

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the tonnage of coal produced by (a) deep and (b) opencast mining for the most recent available year; and what is the projection for these figures in five years' time.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: In 1989-90 the amount of coal produced in Britain was 76·6 million tonnes from deep mines and 18·6 million tonnes from opencast. Future levels of production are for the coal industry to decide and will depend on the tonnages which can be sold on a competitive basis.

Trawsfynnydd Power Station

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will provide details of the ground contamination discovered near the active waste vaults at Trawsfynnydd nuclear power station around September 1990 and the source of this radioactive contamination.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: On 24 July 1990 during excavations for the construction of a new reactor fence close to the former site of a storage tank at the Trawsfynnydd nuclear power station, small amounts of low level radioactive contamination were revealed. This contamination was centred on a bolt approximately twelve inches long and associated rubble. These items are now being stored safely at the station pending their transfer to British Nuclear Fuels plc's low-level waste disposal site at Drigg. There was no radiological hazard to the work force or to members of the public as a result of this incident.

Departmental Achievements

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the principal achievements of his Department since November 1990.

Mr. Wakeham: My Department successfully completed the flotation of the 12 regional electricity companies in November, and plans are on schedule for the flotation of the two generating companies this month. Planning is well advanced for the transfer of responsibility for offshore safety matters to the Health and Safety Executive.

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the total cost of the advertising campaign for the privatisation of the electricity generating companies.

Mr. Wakeham: It is not the practice to give advertising costs in advance of flotations. All expenditure, including that on marketing, will be reported to Parliament in the usual way.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether at the time he appointed Smith New Court to advise on electricity privatisation he was aware they had been criticised by DTI inspectors for their conduct in the Consolidated Goldfields case.

Mr. Wakeham: I took all relevant factors into account in appointing Smith New Court.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether Smith New Court's appointment as advisers on electricity privatisation was the result of a process of competitive tendering.

Mr. Wakeham: It was agreed in 1989 that there should be the same broking syndicate of James Capel, Rowe and Pitman, Smith New Court, Cazenoves, County NatWest and Kleinwort Benson Securities for both the 12 regional electricity companies and the generating companies flotations. Each of the brokers will receive a broking fee for both issues relating to the amount of stock for which they are responsible. As Smith New Court was already a member of the broking syndicate and as no advisory fee will be payable to Smith New Court, a competitive tender would not be appropriate.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list all the individuals and organisations who have been retained by his Department as advisers on electricity privatisation, indicating in each case the aspect on which they have advised together with the date of their appointment and where appropriate the date they ceased to be retained as advisers.

Mr. Wakeham: The information is as follows

Notes:
Certain overseas lawyers have provided advice on overseas jurisdictions.

[1] Lloyds Bank were initially appointed to advise on receiving bank and registrar issues and subsequently appointed as the lead Receiving Bank.
[2] Coopers and Lybrand and Deloitte Haskins and Sells have merged and are now known as Coopers and Lybrand Deloitte.
[3] Now known as Ernst and Young.
[4] Now part of Touche Ross.
[5] Subsequently appointed as Lead Underwriter.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what will be the total underwriting fees in respect of the flotation of the electricity generating companies.

Mr. Wakeham: The total underwriting fees on the flotation of the electricity generating companies have not yet been fixed. The fees will only be settled once the price and terms of the offer for sale are agreed.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he, any other Minister or any of his officials, last had discussions with any director, employee or adviser of the Hanson Group or any of its companies about electricity privatisation.

Mr. Wakeham: My private discussions with companies and individuals about electricity privatisation are confidential. I announced on 23 August 1990 that discussions with Hanson plc on a possible trade sale of PowerGen had ended.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what are the total fees paid out so far to Dewe Rogerson for its involvement in electricity privatisation.

Mr. Wakeham: The fees paid to advisers are commercially confidential. The full costs of the privatisation, including marketing costs, will be reported to Parliament in the usual way.

Electricity Supply

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information is collected systematically by his Department to enable him to discharge his duty under section 3(3)(b) of the Electricity Act 1989 to ensure that electricity distribution companies promote the efficient use of electricity supplied to consumers.

Mr. Wakeham: Section 3 of the Electricity Act 1989 sets out various duties I have to take into account when exercising my functions under the Act. In granting the initial licences to the regional electricity companies, I included conditions in their public supply licences requiring them to produce a code of practice for the provision of information on the efficient use of electricity and to comply with a standard set for this activity. It falls to the Director General of Electricity Supply to approve and monitor those codes and to determine the actual standard of performance.

Electricity Disconnections

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give the source of the Parliamentary Under-Secretary's figures on electricity disconnections of 12 November, Official Report, column 318, and publish the full figures.

Mr. Wakeham: The figures referred to were provided by the Office of Electricity Regulation. The total number of disconnections for the year ending 30 June, which were the latest figures available in November, stood at 62,262, representing 0·33 per cent. of domestic consumers. In 197[illegible] the total was 125,483, representing 0·80 per cent. of domestic consumers.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information is collected systematically by his Department to enable him to discharge his duty under section 3(3)(a)(ii) of the Electricity Act 1989.

Mr. Wakeham: The Secretary of State's duty to protect the interests of consumers in respect of the continuity of supply was taken into account in placing conditions requiring adherence to matters such as the generation security standard, and the distribution and grid codes in the initial Public Electricity Supply and other licences granted by him under the Electricity Act 1989. Responsibility for monitoring and enforcing those conditions lies with the Director General of Electricity Supply. The electricity supply regulations require my Department to be informed of each case of major supply interruption.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when the last quarterly figures for electricity disconnections were published.

Mr. Wakeham: The figures for the year ending 30 September were published by the Office of Electricity Regulation on 12 February. The total number of disconnections during the quarter ending 30 September stood at 14,189, or 0·07 per cent. of all domestic consumers. The number of disconnections for the year ending 30 September was 57,846 or 0·30 per cent. of domestic consumers. The figures for the quarter ending 31 December are expected to be published shortly.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will request the Director General of the Office of Electricity Regulation to initiate a study into the level of cut-offs and voluntary cut-offs during the current cold snap.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Director General of Electricity Supply continually monitors both the level of disconnections and the regional electricity companies' practices relating to disconnections.

Orimulsion

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will place in the Library any information held by his Department on the environmental impact of the burning of orimulsion in power stations.

Mr. Wakeham: I am placing a copy of PowerGen's environmental statement for the installation of an electrostatic precipitator at the Ince B power station and explanatory booklets on orimulsion prepared by BP Bitor in the Library of the House.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when his Department first knew that orimulsion was to be imported into Britain to be burnt in power stations.

Mr. Wakeham: Decisions on the type and quantity of fuel used in electricity generation are an operational matter for the industry. The Central Electricity Generating Board started trials involving the use of orimulsion at the Ince B power station in early 1988 when a single burner was modified to allow the burning of 200 tonnes of the fuel.

Power Stations

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what tonnage of oil was burnt in power stations in 1986 and each subsequent year.

Mr. Wakeham: Figures for the quantity of oil burnt in power stations by the major generating companies in the United Kingdom are as follows:

	Million tonnes
1986	6·1
1987	4·8
1988	5·4
1989	5·5
1990	6·7

Interviews

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many interviews he has given to individual journalists since 1 August 1990.

Mr. Wakeham: I have given a number of interviews since 1 August 1990, individually and collectively, to journalists with an interest in the energy industries. The precise number of interviews is not readily available.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Health Service

12. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the level of spending on the health service in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: A total of £1·16 billion will be spent on the health and personal social services in Northern Ireland in 1991-92. This is an increase of some £127 million or 12·3 per cent. over 1990-91, and demonstrates the Government's commitment to maintaining high standards of services, able to meet the demands of the 1990s.

Hospital Provision

13. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on funding for capital costs in hospital provision.

Mr. Hanley: Funding for capital costs in the current year amounts to over £45 million, an increase of 18 per cent. over last year.

Schemes costing more than £1 million are managed directly by the Department of Health and Social Services, (that's about £16 million) with the balance administered by the boards after option appraisal.

Aircraft Industry

14. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the development of the aircraft construction industry in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: Following its privatisation in October 1989, Short Brothers plc, which is the only aircraft manufacturer in Northern Ireland, is implementing a major capital investment programme aimed at making it a viable and self-sustaining aerospace employer.

Extortion

15. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the latest position with regard to the stopping of extortion rackets.

Dr. Mawhinney: Action to cut off sources of terrorist finance is a vital part of the Government's strategy for ending terrorism in Northern Ireland. Recent action (led by the RUC) has been successful in curtailing the flow of money from a number of traditional sources—including extortion. Parliament is currently being asked to strengthen the law against more sophisticated forms of terrorist financing.

Tourism

17. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the development of tourism in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: The Government is confident that the strategy for tourism now being implemented should achieve sustained growth of tourism to and within Northern Ireland.

23. Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will consider supporting the creation of an all-Ireland tourist authority.

Mr. Needham: I am satisfied that co-operation between the two existing tourist boards represents the best way of promoting the holiday attractions of both parts of the island of Ireland.

Security

18. Mr. Molyneaux: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the security situation in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Brooke: Since I answered a similar question on 17 January there have been two civilian deaths arising from the security situation in Northern Ireland. The police and Army continue to make significant finds of arms and ammunition, and have in recent weeks made several arrests.

26. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he next proposes to meet Ministers of the Government of the Republic of Ireland to discuss the security situation in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Brooke: I expect to discuss security matters with Irish Ministers at the next meeting of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference within the next few weeks.

Political Parties (Discussions)

19. Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the progress of talks with the political parties about a local administration for the Province.

25. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on recent discussions he has had with representatives of the political parties in the Province.

Mr. Brooke: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Orpington (Mr. Stanbrook).

Cross-community Activities

20. Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many schools, youth and community groups are engaged in cross-community activities; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Uptake under the cross-community contact scheme has grown progressively since its introduction in 1987 and today over one-third of all Northern Ireland schools—about 450 schools—and 300 youth or community groups are participating in joint programmes. The budget for the present financial year is £500,000.

Unemployment

21. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the latest available unemployment figures for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: At 10 January 1991 there were 98,268 unemployed claimants in the Province representing 14·1 per cent. of the workforce.

Anglo-Irish Agreement

22. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent meetings he has had with Irish Ministers to discuss the Anglo-Irish Agreement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: Matters arising under the Anglo-Irish Agreement continue to be discussed within the framework of the regular meetings of the Intergovernmental Conference. The last conference meeting was on January 31.

Business Expansion

24. Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what effect terrorist destruction of businesses will have on Government plans for business expansion in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: Terrorist destruction of businesses will obviously make the promotion of Northern Ireland as an investment location more difficult in overseas markets by heightening potential investors' concern about security. This is particularly disappointing after a period when investment in the Province has been very encouraging.

Common Agricultural Policy

27. Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the impact on the Northern Ireland agriculture industry of the recent proposed reforms of the common agriculture policy by the Commission of the European Communities.

Mr. Hanley: The impact on Northern Ireland agriculture cannot be assessed until the European Commission tables detailed proposals. I am not therefore in a position to make a statement at this stage.

Small Businesses

28. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has on the creation of small businesses in the Province.

Mr. Needham: Information on the number of small businesses created is not available. However VAT registration provide a useful indicator of the numbers of businesses created and in the five-year period from 1985 to 1989 an estimated 18,000 businesses registered for VAT in Northern Ireland. While VAT registration relate to businesses of all sizes the vast majority fall within the small business category. In the same period 9,352 people became self-employed under the Training and Employment Agency's enterprise allowance scheme. Since 1986, LEDU has provided assistance to 2,009 new businesses under its enterprise grant scheme.

Further Education

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his estimate of the number of persons in Northern Ireland in full or part-time education who will have their 19th birthday during the current school year.

Dr. Mawhinney: The latest available figures show that for the 1989-90 school year there were 5,480 full-time and 3,407 part-time 19-year-old students.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what was the full-time equivalent staffing level in each of the further education colleges in Northern Ireland during the academic year 1989-90;

(2) what was the full-time equivalent student enrolment to each of the further education colleges in Northern Ireland during the academic year 1989-90.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is as follows:

Further education college	Staff Full-time equivalent lecturers	Enrolments Full-time equivalent students
Belfast College of Technology	289	3,017
Belfast College of Business Studies	138	1,938

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total recurrent budget for each of the further education colleges in Northern Ireland during the academic year 1989-90.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is not held centrally for individual further education colleges and will have to be obtained from the education and library boards. I will write to the hon. Gentleman when the information is to hand and place a copy of my letter in the Library.

Leisure Facilities

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the district council leisure facilities in Northern Ireland from which his Department is seeking to collect rates.

Mr. Needham: The list set out below shows the better known council leisure facilities on which rates are collected.

Preparation of a definitive list would be a most time-consuming exercise and could be prepared only at disproportionate cost.

List of leisure facilities on which rates are collected for all or part of the hereditament

Donard Ward 12 Central Promenade Newcastle BT33 0DJ	Down district council	Tourist centre

Councillors

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Nothern Ireland if he will list all councillors who have been absent from council and committee meetings for more than two months since the local government election in May 1989; how many exceeded three months; how many were disqualified; and what was their party affiliation and the council to which they belonged.

Mr. Needham: Information about the attendance record of councillors is a matter for individual councils.

Council Committees

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Nothern Ireland which councils in Northern Ireland conduct business through committees; and which of these councils form committees which are (a) as proportional to party strengths as is possible, (b) largely proportional or (c) non-proportional.

Mr. Needham: Twenty councils conduct business through committees. Information about representation in proportion to party strengths on such committees is not available in the form requested. Party representation can vary, either by design or choice, from committee to committee within some councils.

Housing, Belfast

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Nothern Ireland how many houses have been rehabilitated by (a) the Northern Ireland Housing Executive and (b) housing associations in each housing district in Belfast in each of the years from 1979 to 1991.

Mr. Needham: (a) This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive but I have been advised by the chief executive that the information is not readily available in the form requested and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

(b) The numbers of dwellings rehabilitated by registered housing associations for the period 1979-80 to 1990-91 are as follows:

Belfast Housing Districts

Year	1	2	3	4	5	6	7
1979-80	6	—	2	20	4	—	28
1980-81	30	28	—	—	31	23	45

[1] Figures for 1990-91 are for the period April 1990-January 1991

Robberies and Burglaries

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many robberies and burglaries were reported during the month of January in and around the vicinity of Millisle village, Co. Down; how many of these incidents involved the use of firearms; and if he will make a statement on the police presence at this location.

Dr. Mawhinney: In January 1991 two burglaries and one robbery in Millisle were reported to the RUC. A firearm was used in the robbery. Millisle area is policed from Donaghadee, approximately two miles away. Mobile patrols cover the area on a 24-hour basis and foot patrols operate in the village.

Intergovernmental Conference

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on discussions between the environment ministers at the recent Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference.

Mr. Needham: I had discussions with the Irish Minister for the Environment, Mr. Padraig Flynn TD, at the conference on 31 January. Among the topics on which we exchanged views were hazardous waste disposal, road improvements and the management of water resources.

Sinn Fein

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make it his policy that Sinn Fein will not be invited to participate in any talks on the future of Northern Ireland until such time as the IRA unconditionally surrenders and dissociates itself from armed struggle and there is verifiable evidence that the IRA has laid down its weapons and destroyed its terrorist arsenal.

Mr. Brooke: So long as Sinn Fein endorses violence the Government will not engage with it as though it were a normal democratic party.

Dundonald Ice Bowl

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what values of rates have been paid in connection with Dundonald International Ice Bowl in each of the past five years.

Mr. Needham: The amount of rates paid on Dundonald International Ice Bowl during 1990-91 was £144,231·00. No payments were made in previous years.

Blood Products

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people with haemophilia in Northern Ireland who require factor VIII infusions are being treated with the high-purity monoclonal products; how many are being treated with the intermediate purity concentrates; if he will break the figures down by product manufacturer; if he will break the figures down in terms of the number of units of each product prescribed in the latest year for which data are available; and if he will break down the figures for each health and social services board.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 7 February 1991]: The available information is as follows. In 1989 three patients who were allergic to intermediate purity Factor VIII were treated with 34,210 units of high purity monoclonal products manufactured by Baxter Health Care Ltd. In the same year approximately 100 patients were treated with intermediate purity Factor VIII concentrate manufactured by the Scottish National Blood Transfusion Service (1·6 million units) and by Alphatherapeutic (UK) Ltd. (1·6 million units). As treatment for haemophilia patients in Northern Ireland is provided on a regional basis at the Royal Victoria hospital the figures for each health and social services board are not readily available.

SCOTLAND

Clinical Physics and Bioengineering

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the numbers on each part of the medical technical officer grade for those administered from the Department of Clinical Physics and Bioengineering, West Graham street, Glasgow; and what are the equivalent figures for those staff in Lothian, Fife, Grampian and Tayside health boards.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is shown in the table:

Medical Technical Officer in Medical Physics WTE at 30 September 1990[1]

Farming

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent assessment has been made of the effect of current interest rates on the farming industry in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Scottish Office Agriculture and Fisheries Department estimates that in 1990 interest payments by farmers for current farming purposes amounted to £116·4 million. Details are in "Scottish Agriculture—Output Input and Income Statistics, January 1991", a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will make a statement explaining the delay in setting the levels of hill livestock compensatory allowances for 1991;

(2) what plans he has to provide financial assistance to the hill livestock industry in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food's reply on 11 February to the hon. Member for Devon, North (Mr. Speller). The increase in rates of hill livestock compensatory allowances announced by my right hon. Friend will add a further £7 million to the £48 million which we pay annually to more than 18,000 Scottish producers. Every effort will be made to make these payments quickly. Other assistance is available under a range of agricultural support schemes, notably the sheep annual premium and the suckler cow premium, which together with the HLCA scheme now provide over £100 million a year to Scottish hill livestock farmers.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the number of full-time farmers in Scotland whose businesses have failed financially in each of the years since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No comprehensive information is available relating to financial failure of farm businesses in Scotland. The only available data of relevance are numbers of farmers declared bankrupt. The annual recorded information on such bankruptcies since 1986—the first year for which the data are likely to be complete—is shown in the table:

	Number of farmers
1986	26
1987	36

[1]1989	17

[1] Provisional.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to meet his EC counterparts to discuss the future of the hill livestock industry in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. Friend is always represented at discussions in the Agriculture Council about matters which affect livestock farmers in Scotland.

Fishing

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met the Scottish Fishermen's Federation to discuss changes in net sizes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My noble Friend met the Scottish Fishermen's Federation on a number of occasions towards the end of last year, including at the December Fisheries Council. A number of issues were discussed at these meetings including possible changes in mesh size. We are currently consulting the industry over a package of improved technical conservation measures proposed for introduction in the North sea and west coast of Scotland this year. These measures include the introduction of 90mm square mesh panels in current demersal fishing gear.

Nature Conservancy Council

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland who will be appointed to the four regions of the Scottish Nature Conservancy Council; who will be their chairmen; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The appointment of chairmen and members to the regional committees of the Nature Conservancy Council for Scotland is a matter for the chairman and board to decide. I have asked the Nature Conservancy Council for Scotland to write to the hon. Member with the information requested.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library a copy of the minutes of the meeting held on 6 February in Cardiff of the three chairmen of the Scottish, Welsh and English Nature Conservancy Councils at their joint committee session; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Joint Nature Conservation Committee is the statutory committee through which the Nature Conservancy Councils for England and Scotland and the Countryside Council for Wales exercise their responsibilities on matters of national and international importance. The JNCC is required to make an annual report on its activities and place a copy in the House. The decision whether to publish or circulate minutes is a matter for the councils.

Small Landholders

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many claims for compensation in respect of resumptions by landlords have been made to the Scottish land court under the Small Landholders (Scotland) Acts 1886 to 1931 in each year since 1977.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is as follows. There have been no further claims since 1986.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many smallholdings, by district are rented under the Small Landholders (Scotland) Acts 1886 to 1931; and if he will bring forward proposals to extend them the same rights and protections provided to crofters by the Crofting Reform Act 1976.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information relating to holdings belonging to the Secretary of State is set out in the table. The Scottish Office Agriculture and Fisheries Department does not hold details of holdings in private or commericial ownership.

My right hon. Friend has no plans to extend the provisions of the Crofting Reform (Scotland) Act 1976 to non-crofting tenants.

Special Needs Training

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the amount of Training Agency expenditure on the (i) youth training scheme and (ii) employment training scheme for trainees with special needs for each of the Training Agency regions in Scotland for each month since September 1988.

Mr. Stewart: This information is not collected.

Hazardous Waste Inspectorate

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will outline the recent activities of the hazardous waste inspectorate in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I am pleased to say that a report of the hazardous waste inspectorate in Scotland has been published today. The report, which covers the period April 1987 to December 1990, outlines the activities and findings of the inspectorate and also sets out a number of conclusions and recommendations concerning waste management practices in Scotland. Copies of the report have been placed in the Library.

This report will be of interest to everyone who has a part to play in ensuring that waste management in Scotland is practised in a responsible and environmentally friendly manner. The findings of the inspectorate, which have been drawn from its surveys and visits over recent years, are discussed in the report. It concludes that whilst a general improvement in waste disposal practices is evident there is still scope for further improvement.

I welcome this report at a time when environmental issues are so high in the minds of everyone and commend its contents to the public and private sectors of the industry alike.

Education Spending

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will produce a table, both at cost and 1990-91 prices, showing what level of expenditure local government has incurred on education in every year since 1978-79 compared to what central Government had built into their assessed need to spend on education.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 8 February 1991]: The information is as follows:

	(1) Expenditure in cash terms (£ million)	(2) Expenditure at 1990-91 prices (£ million)	(3) Provision/GAE in cash terms (£ million)	(4) Provision/GAE at 1990-91 prices (£ million)

Notes:
1. The Government no longer issue assessments of relative expenditure need and the figures for 1990-91 in columns (3) and (4) relate to grant aided expenditure (GAE).
2. In columns (3) and (4) the figures for the years 1978-79 to 1983-84 include provision for libraries and museums as well as education in accordance with the provision categorisation provided in the rate support grant orders.
3. Expenditure figures are at final outturn to 1988-89, provisional outturn for 1989-90 and budget estimate for 1990-91.
4. All years have been converted to 1990-91 prices by means of the Treasury GDP deflator (October 1990).

SOCIAL SECURITY

Family Credit

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average lapse of time between applications made for family credit and the determination thereof in the case of (a) claims made by people who have just started work, (b) renewal claims and (c) all claims.

Mr. Jack: For the 12 months ended December 1990, the available information on the basis requested is as follows:

(a) Claims made by people who have just started work
A fast-path arrangement is available for people who start work after being on unemployment benefit or income support. 88 per cent. of claims dealt with under this arrangement were cleared within five working days. Claims from those people who have just started work can not be identified separately from those of other claimants who have been in work for some time when they make their first claim. The average clearance time for all new claims was 21·5 working days.

(b) Renewal claims
The average clearance time was 19·3 working days.

(c) All claims
The average clearance time was 20·45 working days.

Disability

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the number of potential beneficiaries of the disability working allowance who will be excluded due to the capital limit.

Mr. Scott: It is not possible to estimate with confidence how many people will be excluded from receiving disability working allowance due to the capital limit.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether the research project, Effect of the Actively Seeking Work Provisions, has been completed; and if he will publish the results.

Mr. Jack: The report on the research commissioned by the Department into the effects of the changes to unemployment benefits legislation operative from October 1989, including the introduction of the "actively seeking employment" condition, has not yet been completed. A copy of the report will, in due course, be placed in the Library.

Community Charge Benefit

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in Lambeth have claimed community charge benefit based on claims for reimbursement by his Department.

Miss Widdecombe: As at 30 November 1990, 41,199 individual charge payers were receiving community charge benefit in the London borough of Lambeth. This figure is likely to underestimate the true position as the local authority still had to assess a number of unprocessed benefit claims.

Departmental Achievements

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the principal achievements of his Department since June 1987.

Miss Widdecombe: The Government have continued to commit greater resources than ever before to social security. In 1990-91 total social security spending will have been increased by nearly 41 per cent. in real terms since 1978-79. Specific improvements include extra help for less well-off families and elderly and disabled pensioners. By the end of 1990 over 4 million people had taken out a personal pension and contracted-out of the state earnings-related pension scheme. The new structure of income-related benefits introduced in 1988 enables additional resources to be targeted more effectively than under the old scheme and together with subsequent changes in the tax and national insurance systems has improved work incentives by significantly reducing the worst effects of the poverty and unemployment traps. The recent White Paper "Children Come First" has set out the Government's proposals for a new system of child maintenance in the United Kingdom and the new disability benefits announced in the White Paper "The Way Ahead" are planned to come into operation in April 1992.

Further increases in benefit rates, including child benefit, from April 1991 will bring total expenditure on social security to well over £60 billion a year, reflecting our firm commitment to protect the value of the national insurance pension and to focus extra help on those most in need, such as the less well-off pensioners and families with children, disabled people and carers.

The Department of Social Security is well advanced in its programme of establishing executive agencies. The Resettlement Agency and the Information Technology Services Agency are already in place, and the Contributions Agency and the Benefits Agency—the largest "next steps" agency—are to be established in April 1991. In early 1993 we expect to launch the Child Support Agency. The DSS computerisation programme—one of the largest in the world—is well advanced.

Commitment to improve service to the public continues. For example, clearance times for income support are significantly better than those for its predecessor, supplementary benefit. The relocation of benefits work from some London offices to areas where staff recruitment and retention are easier has also improved service to the public. Plans are well advanced to relocate some 800 DSS headquarters' posts from London and the south east to Leeds by 1992, which will play an important part in the Government's inner cities initiative.

Retired People (Earnings)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many United Kingdom retired people (a) overall and (b) as a proportion of the total retired population received weekly incomes from all sources above the average of those in work in the last year for which figures are available.

Miss Widdecombe: In 1987 approximately half a million (or eight per cent. of) retired pensioner units (ie married couples or singles) are estimated to have an income above the average for all benefit units with at least one working adult. It should be noted that between 1979 and 1987 the incomes of pensioners rose twice as fast as those of the rest of the population.

Note: Income has been equivalised to allow for differences in family size. Retired pensioner units are those where the head is over state pension age and works less than 16 hours per week. Other (non-retired) pensioner units are included with the benefit units containing at least one working adult. A benefit unit is a family group assessed for benefit ie singles or couples with or without children. The data source is the 1987 Family Expenditure Survey.

Residential Homes

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will introduce legislation to enable residents of local authority residential homes for the elderly to receive the same amount of benefit as those in private and voluntary sector homes; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: We have no plans to do so.

The care in the Community proposals from April 1993 will encourage local authorities to consider making use of the independent sector when placing people in residential homes.

War Widows

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many war widows are currently receiving children's allowances; and for how many children;

(2) if he will make it his policy to ensure that there is no further reduction in the combined value of children's allowances and child benefit for war widows' children;

(3) what is the annual loss to a war widow with one, or two or three children respectively, resulting from the decision not to maintain the real value of war widows' children's allowances and child benefit since November 1979;

(4) what was the outcome of his consideration of the issues relating to war widows' children's allowances mentioned in the adjournment debate on child dependency additions on 21 January, Official Report, columns 142-46.

Mr. Jack: The disposable income available to war widows and their families has benefited substantially from this Government's policies. Child allowances are only one element in a structure of benefit payments with levels set above those for other widows on pensions.

Virtually all war widows receiving children's allowances, being "post-1973" war widows are also likely to be receiving children's pensions from the Ministry of Defence under the armed forces pension scheme. This Government have made several significant improvements to the overall position of war widows. The hon. Member will be aware from my reply to him on 28 January 1991 at colums 440-42 that in 1979 war widows' pensions were made tax free; in 1984 a new tier of age allowance was introduced for those over 80; in 1988 the disregard on war pensions for income-related benefits was increased to £5 and to £10 in 1990. In 1990 pre-1973 war widows were awarded special payments of £40 a week. These, too, were tax free and are also totally disregarded for the purpose of calculating entitlement to income-related benefits. Also, in April 1990 war widows' age allowances were increased by more than the rate of inflation. Both war widows' children's allowances and war widows' pensions have consistently been set at preferential rates compared to those applicable to national insurance widows and children.

We will continue to uprate the basic war widows' children's allowance by the increase in the RPI, deducting any overlapping cash increase in child benefit, using the formula introduced by the last Labour Government in order to safeguard war widows against the loss of tax allowances during the phasing in of child benefit.

The number of war widows' children's allowance in payment is about 2,500; information on the number of war widows receiving them is not readily available.

The combined values of war widows' children's allowance and child benefit at current prices and at the values as they would have been had this been uprated in line with movements in the retail prices index are as shown in the tables:

Severe Weather Payments

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the location of points used for the measuring of the temperatures in the United Kingdom for the purposes of triggering special severe weather payments since 1986.

Mr. Scott: Temperatures are measured at the national climatological message (MCM) stations. These are listed in the schedules to the Supplementary Benefit (Single Payments) Regulations 1981 and the schedules to the Social Fund Cold Weather Payments (General) Regulations 1988, copies of which are in the Library.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the total amount paid since 1986 as severe weather payments; and if he will list these by local office.

Mr. Scott: The available information is in the table. Details of the payments for each local office for 1986-87 and 1987-88 are in the Library. For 1988-89, I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) on 5 December 1989 at column 157.

Information for each local office for 1989-90 and 1990-91 is not currently available, but will be placed in the Library in due course.

Social fund cold weather payments
1988-89	2,510
1989-90	406,481
Total	11,107,649

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the number of applications refused by each DSS office for payment of severe weather allowances since 1986.

Mr. Scott: Details of exceptionally cold weather payments for each local office for the winters of 1986-87 and 1987-88 are in the Library.

In 1988-89 Social Fund cold weather payments were made only for the area covered by the Department's local office at Galashiels where 174 claims were refused because the eligibility criteria for the payments were not fulfilled. There were 502 successful claims.

Information on refusals for each local office for 1989-90 and for 1990-91 is not currently available, but will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy to advertise the application forms for special cold weather payments in the appropriate local newspapers.

Mr. Scott: When a weather station triggers, local offices linked with it have been instructed to place an advertisement in the local press. This advertisement includes a claim form for a cold weather payment.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list all those social security offices which advertised the application forms for special cold weather payments in their appropriate local newspapers.

Mr. Scott: All social security offices have been instructed to advertise, and are in the process of doing so.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will instruct all local social security offices to advertise the application forms for special cold weather payments in their appropriate local newspapers.

Mr. Scott: On 8 February all social security offices were instructed to place such advertisements in appropriate local newspapers.

Local Offices, Cardiff

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to formulate and announce plans to alter the provision and location of offices and counter services for social security in the Cardiff area.

Miss Widdecombe: In April 1991 the Barry, Cardiff West, Cardiff East and Cardiff Central offices will combine to form the South Glamorgan district and will be managed as a single unit. The senior management team for this project has recently been appointed, and one of their priorities will be to draw up detailed plans to provide the best possible service to local customers. There will be the widest possible consultation with Members of Parliament, and with local statutory and voluntary organisations. There are no plans to close offices in the Cardiff area.

Bari Harbour

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many appeals have been made to the north west of England pensions appeal tribunal involving cases arising from the Bari harbour mustard gas disaster in 1943; and how many of them have been successful;

(2) pursuant to his reply of 4 February, Official Report, col. 63-64, what gave rise to the special exercise in 1986-87 to trace cases of casualties caused by the Bari harbour mustard gas disaster in 1943; how this exercise was carried out; how many new cases arose from the exercise; how many of these were successful; and if he has any plans to conduct a similar special exercise;

(3) pursuant to his reply of 4 February, Official Report, column 63, when the first claim for a war pension arising out of the Bari harbour incident in 1943 was made; and when the last one was made.

Miss Widdecombe: The special exercise was undertaken following the exceptional decision to backdate the payment of war disablement pension to an individual who had been exposed to mustard gas whilst serving in the Royal Navy at Bari harbour in 1943. He claimed a war pension in 1983 and contended that he would have claimed earlier had he been aware of the precise nature of the substance with which he had been contaminated.

The purpose of the special exercise was to identify other casualties of the incident in order to establish whether similar action was appropriate. The names of the casualties of the Bari harbour incident were obtained from Ministry of Defence and Department of Health and Social Security records. A press notice announcing the exercise was issued and as a result of this 87 new claims for war pension were received of which 33 were successful, bringing the total number of claims arising from the incident to 185, of which 106 have been successful. All awards for exposure to mustard gas at Bari harbour were reviewed to see whether backdating was appropriate. The exercise confirmed that all but one of those traced were aware at the time of the incident that they had been exposed to mustard gas. Little purpose would therefore be served by conducting a similar exercise.

The first claim for war pension as a result of the Bari harbour incident was made in 1943. Information is not available regarding the date on which the last claim was made nor on the number of appeals that have been made to the north-west of England pensions appeal tribunal.

Statutory Sick Pay

Mr. Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the firms and trade organisations the deregulation unit consulted over their new legislation on statutory sick pay and the outcome of these consultations.

Mr. Scott: Following the introduction of the Statutory Sick Pay Bill on 8 November 1990, a copy of the Bill and press release were sent to all employers and organisations represented on the Department's employers panel. Subsequently, Ministers and/or officials have discussed the proposals with the Confederation of British Industry, the National Federation of the Self Employed and Small Businesses, the Forum of Private Businesses and the National Farmers Union. In addition, Ministers have responded to some 200 written representations, mainly from hon. Members on behalf of employers and their organisations.

The Government have introduced a scheme for small employers' relief to assist small employers with the cost of the statutory sick pay changes.

Banks

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will seek to introduce legislation to control bank charges on retail transactions.

Mr. Maples: I have been asked to reply.

The Government see no need to introduce legislation to control the level of bank charges. These are commercial decisions for the banks and subject to competition.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will propose legislation to open bank operations to competition and scrutiny by bodies representing consumers' and clients' associations.

Mr. Maples: I have been asked to reply.

Banks are already subject to competition and scrutiny by consumer bodies.

WALES

Educational Psychologists

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report for each education authority in Wales for the financial year 1991-92 the specific grant to be paid by his Department for each trainee educational psychologist to pursue the post-graduate course enabling them to satisfy the criteria for employment as educational psychologists in local authorities.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Allocations under the grants for educational support and training programme have been made available as set out in the following table. This covers ongoing commitments for the 1991-92 from the 1990-91 financial year and that part of new initial training activity falling within 1991-92.

Clwyd	39,600
Dyfed	29,200
Gwent	8,000
Gwynedd	20,000
Mid Glamorgan	52,900
West Glamorgan	39,300

No bids were received from Powys and South Glamorgan local education authorities.

Employment Training

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many places were offered annually under the employment training scheme since its founding; and how many of these positions have been filled by trainees with special needs.

Mr. David Hunt: The number of employment training places offered annually in Wales is as follows:

Some 22,300 between September 1988 and March 1989.
Some 15,200 in 1989-90.
Some 13,400 in 1990-91.

These figures relate to locally contracted provision only. Figures for nationally contracted places are not available on a regional basis.

Since the introduction of the programme in Wales, people with disabilities have accounted for 12 per cent. of starts and those requiring literacy and numeracy training 16 per cent. of starts.

A487, Gwynedd

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the starting date for the construction of the Felinheli bypass on the A487 trunk road in Gwynedd; and if he will list all causes of delay with regard to this scheme since it was first placed in the Welsh trunk roads preparation pool.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Inclusion of a scheme in the trunk road programme indicates that a road improvement is needed—it does not convey any commitment as to timing. This depends on satisfactory completion of engineering design and statutory procedures; and on scheme priorities in relation to the finance available. The Felinheli—Port Dinorwic—bypass is expected to start in period up to April 1994. Objections to supplementary orders published late last year are under consideration and provisional arrangements are being made for a public inquiry in mid-1991.

Mental Illness

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many places there were in day centres in Wales for mentally ill people in 1989; and what was the corresponding figure for 1979.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: There were 935 places in day centres in Wales for mentally ill people at 31 March 1989. The corresponding figure for 31 March 1979 was 393.

Music (Grants)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much money has been paid out of Welsh Office funds by way of grant or subsidy in Wales during the past 12 months to support (a) orchestral music, (b) opera, (c) choral music, (d) brass bands, (e) folk music and (f) rock music.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Government financial support for the performing arts in Wales is channelled through the Welsh Arts Council which receives its funding from my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Arts via the Arts Council of Great Britain. There has been no separate Welsh Office support for such activities save for the £842,000 which we announced on 31 January had been transferred from our existing provision to the Office of Arts and Libraries to write off the accumulated deficit of the Welsh National Opera.

Physiotherapists

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many trained physiotherapists there are currently employed by the national health service in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: At 30 September 1990 there were 766—a whole-time equivalent of 597·4—trained physiotherapists employed by the NHS in Wales.

Residential Homes

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many places there were available in Wales in residential homes in 1988; what were the corresponding figures for 1978; and how many were (a) local authority homes, (b) registered homes run by voluntary organisations and (c) registered homes run by private owners.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: There were 17,836 places available in local authority, private and voluntary residential homes for elderly, younger physically handicapped, blind, mentally ill, mentally handicapped and alcohol dependent people at 31 March 1988. The corresponding figure at 31 March 1978 was 10,750. The number of local authority homes, registered homes run by voluntary organisations and registered homes run by private owners is shown in the table:

Function of home	1978[1]			1988[1]
	Local authority homes	Voluntary homes	Private homes	Local authority homes	Voluntary homes	Private homes
Elderly, younger physically handicapped and blind	201	93[2]		201	36	421
Mentally ill	37	1	5	53	4	19
Mentally handicapped	29	2	6	90	19	42
Mixed[3]	13	0	0	1	0	0
Alcohol dependence	[4]—	[4]—	[4]—	0	3	0

[1] As at 31 March.
[2] No split available between voluntary and private.
[3] These homes accommodate both mentally ill and mentally handicapped people.
[4] Not available.

Welsh Language Bill

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) when he intends to publish his draft Welsh Language Bill;

(2) when he plans to place legislation before the House to enact a new Welsh Language Bill;

(3) what is his response to the draft Welsh Language Bill published on 14 February by the Welsh Language Board.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Welsh Language Board published its proposals for legislation in support of the Welsh language on 11 February. Those proposals will be carefully considered and the Government's response will be announced in due course.

Coal Industry (Redundancies)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what special measures he plans to take to deal with the consequences of redundancies in the coal industry in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: The Welsh Office and other agencies will respond swiftly to opportunities as they arise.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the redundancies effected and declared in the coal industry in south Wales since 1 January 1990, indicating the measures he has taken to ameliorate their impact upon communities.

Mr. David Hunt: Since 1 January 1990 there have been 880 redundancies effected and 705 redundancies announced in the coal industry in south Wales. The Welsh Office, Welsh Development Agency, British Coal Enterprise, other agencies and Government Departments are working together and are responding to opportunities as they arise to offset the effects that the redundancies have on local communities.

New Crown Buildings

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has for utilising the space at the New Crown buildings, Cathays park, after its evacuation by the Export Credit Guarantees Department insurance services group.

Mr. David Hunt: It is expected to be some time before the space now occupied by ECGD insurance services group in the new Crown building, Cathays park, becomes vacant. The reletting of this space, which forms part of the Government's civil estate, is ultimately the responsibility of the Department of Environment—Property Holdings—but my Department will be keeping in close touch with events.

Education Department (Location)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has for the future office location of the Education Department of the Welsh Office.

Mr. David Hunt: At present, none.

Leybucht Bay

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his reply of 12 November 1990, Official Report, column 49, when he will place in the Library an authorised English language version of the Advocate-General's opinion on the Leybucht bay case heard at Luxembourg before the European Court of Justice.

Mr. David Hunt: An English language version of the Advocate-General's opinion prepared by the court is unlikely to be available for some time. However, I understand that an English language translation prepared by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office will be available very shortly. I shall be placing a copy of this in the Library of the House.

EMPLOYMENT

Training

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will outline his policy on setting targets for the numbers of those in training who obtain qualifications; and if he will give the reasons underlying the policy.

Mr. Jackson: Targets for the numbers of employment training and youth training trainees who are expected to obtain national vocational qualifications at various levels are negotiated between my Department and individual training and enterprise councils. Targets are influenced by, amongst other things, past performance, expected improvements in performance and local circumstances.

Action Credit

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what impact the earnings paid to participants in the action credit pilot scheme being run by the employment service will have on their (a) entitlement to housing benefit, (b) entitlement to community charge benefit, and (c) entitlement to income support during (i) the time that they are building up their terminal commission bonus and (ii) when they receive their accumulated bonus at the end of the action credit; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The action credit scheme was recently piloted by the Department of Employment's training, enterprise and education directorate (formerly the Training Agency) for people leaving employment training who are receiving income support.

Under the scheme, participants who take up part-time work placements receive payments equal to the level of their income support earnings disregard, normally £5 or £15 per week. These earnings have no effect on entitlement to income support, housing benefit or community charge benefit.

The balance of the earnings is accumulated and paid at a later date. Any income support in payment is reduced by the net weekly equivalent of the earnings, after deducting a further earnings disregard, for a forward period equal to the length of the period of employment. Housing benefit and community charge benefit are not affected.

If income support is not in payment, or is extinguished by the earnings, the accumulated bonus is treated as capital for the purposes of housing benefit and community charge benefit. It will only affect those benefits if the payment takes any existing capital over £3,000, of if the participant's capital is already over that amount.

Unemployment

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many persons in the United Kingdom have been unemployed for (a) one year, (b) two years, (c) three years, (d) three to five years and (e) over five years.

Mr. Jackson: The information is contained in the following table and can also be obtained from the NOMIS database system in the House of Commons Library.

Duration	[1] Total
0-1 year	1,162,879
1-2 years	202,631
2-3 years	80,374
3-5 years	81,304
5 years or more	143,432

[1] Unemployment figures by duration are produced quarterly. The figures shown are for October 1990, the latest date available, and are on the unadjusted basis.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what initiatives he is considering in order to reduce long-term unemployment within the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: We already have in place a comprehensive package of employment and training measures to help the long-term unemployed back into work. The range of help available for individuals is the widest ever. Next year we shall be providing up to 100,000 additional opportunities through programmes such as jobclub and the job interview guarantee.

Labour Statistics

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what progress the employment service has made in meeting the numerical targets outlined in its 1990-91 agency agreement; and if he will show the specific targets and achievements for the latest available date in relation to (a) placing unemployed people in jobs, (b) placing the long-term unemployed in jobs and (c) the number of claims not pursued; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Employment service targets for placing people into jobs this financial year are set out in the annual performance agreement published in April 1990. I am informed by the chief executive of the employment service that in the period April to December 1990 the employment service placed 1,088,286 unemployed people into jobs (annual target 1,650,000), of whom 165,400 had been claiming benefit for six months or longer (annual target 275,000). Over the same period 320,034 people enquired at local offices of the employment service about entitlement to benefit but did not pursue a claim (reference level 400,000 in 1989-90 financial year). The chief executive will report to the Secretary of State on employment service achievements at the end of the financial year and his report will be published in the summer.

Annual Performance Agreement

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he intends to place in the Library a copy of the new annual performance agreement agreed with the employment service for 1991-92; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Discussions on the 1991-92 annual performance agreement are well advanced. I intend to place a copy in the Library by the beginning of April.

Part-time Work

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he intends to ratify EC directive 1983-90 on part-time work.

Mr. Forth: The draft directives on part-time work are still under discussion in the European Council.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many unemployed claimants in each month since 9 October 1989, for each region and for Great Britain as a whole (a) have been issued with a warning letter for not actively seeking work, (b) had their claims referred to an adjudication officer for not actively seeking work, (c) had their claims (i) allowed or (ii) disallowed, (d) have been referred to an adjudication officer for refusing employment; how many of those in (d) have had their benefit (1) disqualified or (2) allowed; how many have been referred to an adjudication officer for neglect to avail oneself of employment; and how many of those have had their benefit (a) disqualified or (b) allowed.

Mr. Jackson: Questions on operational matters in the employment service executive agency are the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his reply of 5 February, Official Report, column 90, what consultations he has had with the chairman of South Glamorgan TEC concerning the issuing of advertisements to tender for the construction of the new TEC building.

Mr. Jackson: I have had no such consultations.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what guidelines he has issued to the training and enterprise councils concerning advertising for senior management positions.

Mr. Jackson: TECs have been issued with a staffing manual which sets out certain procedures which they are required to observe. This includes the obligation to advertise openly the post of chief executive should a TEC not wish to appoint an Employment Department group secondee.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what guidelines he has issued to the training and enterprise councils regarding the employment of close relatives of TEC chairmen in senior management positions.

Mr. Jackson: No specific guidance has been issued.

DEFENCE

Transmitter, Scotland

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the plans for an experimental extremely low frequency transmitter in Scotland.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: We have reassessed this project in the light of current defence requirements and have decided not to proceed with the programme to construct an experimental transmitter in Glengarry forest. Accordingly, we shall not be proceeding with the notice of proposed development. We are notifying local authorities to this effect.

Gulf War

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people from the Paisley, South constituency are currently on military service in the Gulf or engaged in support services in this country.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested could not be provided without incurring disproportionate cost.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the Government's war aims encompass the bombing of any non-Iraqi vehicles on the main Iraq-Jordan highway; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No. The Government's objectives are those set out in the United Nations Security Council resolutions. The allied intention is to implement these resolutions in the shortest possible time with the minimum casualties. Allied pilots have instructions only to attack military targets which could pose a threat to allied forces or facilities which are supporting Iraq's occupation of Kuwait.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received about the delay experienced by Mrs. Joan Webb of Leicester in communicating with her son Colin Webb of the Signals Regiment at BFPO 649; what is the length of time now taken to transmit mail to services personnel in the Gulf; and what further measures he is taking to improve the situation.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The hon. Gentleman has been in contact with my office about a delay experienced by Mrs. Joan Wells in communicating with her son in the Gulf. The matter is being investigated, and I will write to the hon. Gentleman shortly.

In general, the transmit time to the Gulf for letters is around five days, and ten days for parcels. These timings may be exceeded for troops in forward positions.

Transit times are monitored regularly and every effort is made to achieve the earliest possible delivery.

Nulear Test Veterans

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is his current assessment of the effects on British service men present in the vicinity of the second United Kingdom nuclear test at Christmas Island in 1958 of their exposure to radiation;

(2) what is his current assessment of the effects on ex-service men present in the vicinity of the first United Kingdom nuclear test at Christmas Island in 1958 of their exposure to radiation.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will now estimate the number of premature deaths of ex-service men who took part in the Christmas Island tests between 1952 and 1958, including the clean up operations up to 1964.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the National Radiological Protection Board report NRPB-R214, "Mortality and Cancer Incidence in UK Participants in UK Atmospheric Nuclear Weapon Tests and Experimental Programmes" published in 1988. In their report, the NRBP did not establish a causal link between any increased incidence of cancer and participation in the test programme.

The NRPB are now carrying out an analysis of data received up until 1 January 1988 and their further report will be available in 1992.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will now reconsider the benefit and compensation claims of nuclear test veterans who took part in the British nuclear test programme from 1952 until 1958, including the clean-up programme up to 1964; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Government's policy is based on the National Radiological Protection Board's (NRPB) report published in 1988, which found no casual link between participation in the test programme and any increased incidence of cancer. A further follow-up study by the NRPB has been commissioned and it will be necessary to await the conclusions of this before considering what changes, if any, might be appropriate to the Government's current policy.

Arms Fair, Baghdad

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations Her Majesty's Government received opposing British involvement in the first Baghdad international arms fair held in April 1989.

Mr. Alan Clark: A number of hon. Members and members of the public registered their opposition to the participation of United Kingdom companies in the international arms fair held in Baghdad in April 1989.

Gulf Crisis (Nuclear Weapons)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with his American counterpart concerning the conditions under which United States forces in the allied military alliance deployed in the Gulf region would be permitted to use nuclear weapons.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend keeps in regular contact with his American counterpart. The details of these discussions are confidential. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister made the Government's position on the possible use of United Kingdom nuclear weapons in the Gulf quite clear on 15 January 1991 at col. 726.

Quality Assurance

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current estimate of the cost of moving the Directorate General of Quality Assurance to (a) Stockton-on-Tees and (b) Portland, in Dorset.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Studies have yet to be completed.

Forces Personnel

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) Royal Navy, (b) Royal Air Force and (c) Army personnel were (i) absent without leave and (ii) applied for discharge as conscientious objectors between 1 January and the latest available date; what were the figures for the comparable period of 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces will write to the hon. Member.

Written Answers to Questions

ENERGY

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what estimates he has available to him of the effect on potential first-time share buyers of the use of well-known recent television series characters in the flotation advertising campaigns for the electricity (a) distribution and (b) generating companies.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: No estimates of the effect of the advertising campaigns on first-time share buyers have been made. The purpose of the advertising campaigns has been to inform members of the general public about the flotations, whether or not they have bought shares before.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisoners (Letters)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to ensure that all prisoners writing to their hon. Members from any of Her Majesty's prison establishments give their home address in the letter in order that any hon. Member receiving the letter is immediately able to confirm that the writer is in fact a constituent.

Mrs. Rumbold: Prison standing order 5D3, a copy of which is in the Library, states that prisoners should be advised that letters to hon. Members should show the home address, if the prisoner has one. This is now covered in the information booklets for prisoners. It is not generally practicable, however, to ensure that prisoners comply with the recommended procedure as the routine reading of prisoners' mail has been abolished for category D prisoners and reduced to a small sample for category C prisoners.

Entry Refusals

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what criteria are used to decide what figures are kept for those from (a) India, Pakistan and Bangladesh and (b) non-EC Europe and North America who are refused entry into the United Kingdom under primary purpose rules.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The collection of data on persons outside the Indian sub-continent applying for entry clearance for settlement in the United Kingdom was terminated at the end of 1979 because it was considered that its usefulness did not justify the resources required to undertake it. Information continues to be collected on persons applying in the sub-continent because of the large number of applications there. Since 1983 this information has included the reason(s) for refusal for spouses and fiancé(e)s refused entry clearance.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Overseas Aid

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what EC funds for 1991-92 have been allocated to assist (a) economic, (b) environmental, (c) social, (d) scientific, (e) technical and (f) cultural programmes in (i) Africa, (ii) Asia and (iii) Latin America.

Mrs. Chalker: The countries of Africa included in the Lomé convention have been allocated 4,685·5 million ecu (about £3,245 million) for the period 1990 to 1995. This figure is not allocated in advance as between individual years or categories of aid. The European Community's approved budget for 1991 does not distinguish between the categories of aid required. The total payments provision for 1991 for Asia is 175·9 million ecu (about £122 million), and for Latin America 111·2 million ecu (about £77 million).

Know-how Funds

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to extend the scope of the know-how fund for central and eastern European countries to include the education and training of non-governmental organisations in the monitoring of human rights and the practical experience of international law; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: The main priorities of the know-how fund are to facilitate the transition to a market economy and a plural democracy. We have no immediate plans to extend the scope of the know-how fund as the hon. Gentleman suggests.

TRANSPORT

Falmouth Harbour

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will postpone the public inquiry into the proposed Falmouth Harbour Revision Order to allow fishermen's organisations time to make full representations.

Mr. McLoughlin: Not at this late stage. The National Federation of Fishermen's Organisations registered an objection to the proposed order on 12 November 1990 after it had been advertised, and were notified on 10 January 1991 that the inquiry would take place on 21 February 1991.

Drink Driving

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the number of alcohol tests on drivers each week and the numbers (a) above twice the legal limit, (b) above the legal limit but below twice the limit and (c) below the legal limit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have been asked to reply.

Statistics of breath tests for England and Wales are published in Home Office statistical bulletins. The most recent detailed statistics, for 1989, were published in issue number 25/90. A copy of this bulletin is in the Library.

In 1989, in England and Wales, 540·9 thousand screening breath tests were reported and there were in addition 8,500 cases of persons arrested for impairment or required to provide an evidential sample for other reasons. The total requirement, 549·4 thousand, is equivalent to a weekly average of about 10,540 tests.

Of the screening tests, 427,900 were negative, leaving a total requirement for evidential tests of 121,500. The final outcome of these evidential tests is given in table 9 of the statistical bulletin 25/90. The number of positive tests was 94,900 which is equivalent to a weekly average of about 1,820 tests. The remainder includes not only negative results but also cases where the test was refused or where a sample could not be obtained. For 37,700 of the positive tests, the outcome was more than twice the legal limit, which is equivalent to about 720 tests a week.

ENVIRONMENT

Thesis Computer System

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what were the total costs of the Property Services Agency Thesis computer system.

Mr. Yeo: The net cost of the PSA Thesis computer system was £8·6 million.

Non-domestic Rates

Mr. Richard Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate how many non-domestic properties in England had rate increases of (a) 10 per cent. and above and (b) 20 per cent. and above in each year from 1986-87 to 1991-92.

Mr. Portillo: Estimates of the number of non-domestic properties in England subject to increases in rate bills of 10 per cent. and over and 20 per cent. and over are shown in the table.

Non-domestic properties with rate increases

Thousands

	10 per cent. and over	20 per cent. and over
1986-87	2,700	660
1987-88	520	70
1988-89	1,430	20
1989-90	1,100	70
1990-91	1,000	890
1991-92	1,200	720

Due to a change in the definition of non-domestic properties, following the introduction of the new system of local government finance, estimates for 1990-91 and 1991-92 are not comparable with earlier years.

The estimates for 1986-87 to 1989-90 take no account of increases in rate bills as a result of changes in rateable values following alterations of the valuation list in those years.

1851 Exhibition

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the holder of his office last attended a meeting of the royal commissioners for the exhibition of 1851.

Mr. Heseltine: No Secretary of State for the Environment has attended a meeting of the royal commissioners. The then Minister for Public Buildings and Works attended a meeting on 12 December 1962.

Leisure Centres

Sir Ian Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will publish a table showing, for each local authority, the impact on the rates and community charge of the net running costs of leisure centres as a percentage of the relevant sum for the years 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Portillo: The total of net current expenditure, debt charges and expenditure on other non-current items (such as flood defence payments to the National Rivers Authority) represents spending to be funded by revenue support grant, community charges, non-domestic rates, specific grants, interest receipts and appropriation from financial reserves in 1990-91; and by block grant, rates, specific grants, interest receipts and appropriation from financial reserves in 1989-90. Authorities are free to decide, within these constraints, how spending on individual services will be allocated. The impact on the rates and community charge of spending on leisure centres cannot therefore be quantified.

The impact on net current expenditure of spending on swimming pools, sports and recreation grounds can however be shown by expressing it as a percentage of net current expenditure. I have arranged for the available information for individual authorities to be laid in the Library of the House.

Radioactive Waste Conference

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he or officials of his Department received an invitation to attend the conference on radioactive waste issues for local authorities, on 12 February.

Mr. Baldry: No.

Sellafield

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next plans to visit Sellafield; and for what purpose.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend plans to visit Sellafield on 26 February to open the Windscale vitrification plant.

"Greening the Planet"

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to arrange a subscription for his departmental library for the new magazine "Greening the Planet".

Mr. Baldry: No. The contents of the first issue add nothing new to discussion on environmental matters.

Kirklees Metropolitan Council

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what the housing investment programme allocation for Kirklees metropolitan council is for 1991-92; and what it was for each of the preceding five years.

Mr. Yeo: The total housing investment programme allocation for Kirklees metropolitan council for 1991-92 is currently £10·690 million. This may increase if Kirklees is successful in attracting further targeted allocations from the estate action programme or from other targeted sources. The council has been invited to work up one estate action scheme which could attract an allocation of £0·300 million in 1991-92 and a continuation allocation of £0·860 million in 1992-93. The equivalent amounts, including all estate action and other supplementary allocations, for the financial years 1986-87 to 1990-91 were:

	£ million
1986-87	8·478
1987-88	9·067
1988-89	9·041

East Newcastle Quayside Development

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what loan facilities or other financial assistance he has approved to enable the Newcastle urban development corporation to finance the public sector contribution to the east Newcastle quayside development.

Mr. Portillo: To date Tyne and Wear Development Corporation has been given approval for expenditure totalling £12·6 million in connection with the redevelopment of the east Quayside area of which it has so far spent about £5 million. In addition, land is being acquired through vesting orders approved by Parliament, on which it has spent £473,000. The Department is currently considering the full project submission.

Bristol Channel

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether an assessment has been made on the effects on the ecology of the Bristol channel resulting from the dropping of unused bombs from B52 bombers off the north Devon coast.

Mr. Baldry: No formal assessment has been made of the environmental effect of the aircraft emergency procedure for the jettisoning of unused B52 bombs in the military danger area of Hartland point. Such bombs would have been made safe before being jettisoned, and would be unlikely to have any significant environmental effect.

Land Registers

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 30 January, Official Report, column 932, if he will include in his review of ways of improving land registers, the various categories which exclude land from the register with a view to including them.

Mr. Yeo: I can confirm that our review covers how far the present exclusions might sensibly be reduced. Any detailed proposals would take account of the responses on this point to last year's consultation paper, and would be the subject of further consultation.

Vacant Land

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the amount of vacant, derelict, dormant, underused and under-utilised land excluded from the register because of exceptions from the rule.

Sir George Young [holding answer 14 February 1991]: There is no basis for making any such estimate. Whether a site falls within any of the exemptions will depend on circumstances peculiar to that site—for example, the timing of acquisition, planning decisions taken, or the site's physical characteristics.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the 10 largest local authority owners of vacant, dormant, derelict, underused and under-utilised land on the register.

Sir George Young [holding answer 14 February 1991]: Information on local authority holdings of unused and underused land is held on individual authorities' registers. Complete up-to-date information is not available centrally. Information on total local authority holdings of derelict land in each area is contained in the "Survey of Derelict Land in England 1988" but the total holdings of individual authorities are not identified.

Severe Weather

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a one-off payment to local authorities for extra expenditure for the clearance of roads and for the provision of heating for the elderly and accommodation for the homeless during the present cold spell.

Mr. Key [holding answer 14 February 1991]: At present, we have no intention to do so. Local authorities' standard spending assessments include an allowance for the costs of clearing snow and gritting roads, and we would expect authorities to budget for snow clearance. However, if any authority can demonstrate an unusual financial burden in relation to snow clearance or other costs incurred as a result of the cold spell, they should let my Department have the details so that we may consider whether special financial assistance is justified.

The Government are meeting the costs of local authorities and voluntary bodies in relation to emergency shelters for 700 rough sleepers in London.

Finally, as my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister announced in the House on 12 February, the waiver of the 0 deg C temperature to qualify for a social fund cold weather payment has been extended for a further week in respect of the seven days ending on 14 February.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Dundonald Ice Bowl

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern ireland what arrears in the values of rates are estimated as due for each of the past five years for Dundonald international ice bowl.

Mr. Needham: Rates for the years 1986-87 and 1987-88 have been paid in full. The total arrears due are £167,233·46 made up of £5,911·64 for 1988-89, £77,900·04 for 1989-90 and £83,421·78 for 1990-91.

Housing

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many homes the Northern Ireland Housing Executive own at Windmills Gardens, Millisle, County Down; when these homes were built; how many of these homes are occupied by persons of pensionable age; how many of these homes have full or partial heating; and what proposals there are for the provision of central heating in these homes.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, but I have been advised by the chief executive that the Housing Executive owns nine dwellings at Windmill gardens, Millisle, County Down. These dwellings were built in 1965 and two are occupied by persons of pensionable age. Full central heating has been installed in two dwellings and all nine dwellings will be included in a comprehensive improvement scheme scheduled for early 1993 which will include the provision of full central heating.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list in the Official Report all chemical weapons precursors which are subject to United Kingdom export controls.

Mr. Sainsbury: Chemical weapons precursors subject to control are listed in the Export of Goods (Control) (Amendment No. 6) Order 1990 made on 20 December. A copy is available in the Library.

The export of any chemical is subject to control if the exporter knows or has grounds for suspecting that it is intended for, or likely to be used in, the production of chemical weapons.

Export Control

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what orders he has made since 1979 in regard to Syria, Egypt, Israel, Libya, Iraq and Iran, in terms of a statutory instrument prohibiting the export of goods under the Import, Export and Customs Powers (Defence) Act 1939.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 12 February 1991]: Export of Goods (Control) Orders were made in 1981, 1985, 1987 and 1989 under the powers of the Import, Export and Customs Powers (Defence) Act 1939, each order replacing the previous order. These orders were subject to amendment orders to add or delete goods from export control. The Export of Goods (Control) (Iraq and Kuwait Sanctions) Order 1990 (S.I. 1640) was also made under the powers of the Act. These orders prohibit the export of specified goods without a licence to all or certain destinations, including Syria, Egypt, Israel, Libya, Iraq and Iran, as appropriate.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the goods permitted for export under the open general export licence (chemicals) of 21 December 1990.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 12 February 1991]: These goods are listed in the open general export licence (chemicals) which came into force on 31 December 1990. I am arranging for a copy to be placed in the Library.

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will ensure that civil servants currently employed in the ECGD have freedom of choice as to whether they remain in the civil service or transfer to the proposed privatised company.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 12 February 1991]: I refer to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the then Secretary of State on 18 December 1989 at cols 23-24:

"ECGD staff will be asked whether they wish to remain within the Civil Service, or to transfer to the new company. ECGD will use its best endeavours to meet their wishes where these are consistent with the business needs of ECGD and the company."

This remains the Government's intention.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what training and development opportunities he will make available to civil servants currently employed within the ECGD who decide that their future choice is to continue in the civil service rather than moving into a privatised company.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 12 February 1991]: All staff who remain within ECGD will continue to benefit from that Department's training and career development facilities, including appropriate training if any change of job is involved. Other civil service departments would provide similar facilities for anyone who might transfer from ECGD.

Companies Act 1989

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many statutory instruments and codes of practice are provided for in the Companies Act 1989.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 13 February 1991]: The Companies Act 1989 contains 46 powers exercisable by statutory instrument, and one provision recognising compliance with a code of practice as conduct expected of persons authorised to carry on investment business.

PRIME MINISTER

Coastal Zone

Ms. Walley: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list all Government Departments and non-departmental public bodies with an interest in the coastal zone.

The Prime Minister: All Government Departments may have an interest in the coast or coastal waters in the exercise of their normal duties. The same will apply to many non-departmental public bodies.

Secure Accommodation

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Prime Minister which Department will be responsible for funding the new Social Services Department secure units required under the proposals to abolish prison remand of juveniles.

The Prime Minister: The Department of Health already has powers to make grants to local authorities to meet the capital cost of new secure units, and intends to meet the local authority associations to discuss the nature and extent of any further secure provision required for remanded juveniles.

HEALTH

Mental Hospitals

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to ensure that the rundown and closure of hospitals for the mentally ill does not proceed faster than the establishment of adequate resettlement and community care for the discharged patients; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: In a recent circular HC(90)23/ HASSL(90)11, a copy of which is in the Library, health authorities were asked to ensure that any reduction in the number of hospital beds does not outpace the development of alternative community services. The White Paper "Caring for People", states that we "will not approve the closure of any mental hospital unless it can be demonstrated that adequate alternatives have been developed".

Private Care Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provisions are made by his Department to recompense local authorities social services departments for the cost implications of taking over the running of private care homes which are de-registered.

Mr. Dorrell: No separate central provision for such contingencies is made. The very few instances of local authorities assuming temporary responsibility for the management of private care homes seem to have occurred where deregulation has been ordered by a justice of the peace. Local authority returns show that only seven such orders were made in 1989.

Residential Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his response to the recent Care and Counsel report on privacy in private and voluntary residential homes, a copy of which he has been sent.

Mr. Dorrell: Our community care proposals stress that frail and vulnerable people are entitled to a good quality of residential care and nursing home care. This includes the right to privacy and dignity. We aim to help ensure that this is achieved by the introduction in six weeks' time of inspection units which will monitor standards in both public and independent sector residential care homes, by the introduction of a new complaints system, and by the provision of a 25 per cent. increase in the training support grant for 1991-92. Community care purchaser contracts will further reinforce the requirement that good quality services are provided.

Kirklees Metropolitan Council

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the standard spending assessment for social services for Kirklees metropolitan council for 1991-92; and what it was for 1990-91.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is as follows:

	£ million
1990-91	28·1
1991-92	34·2

Neonatal Care

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for each region and for England as a whole the number of (a) special and intensive care cots, (b) special and/or intensive care cots closed during 1990-91 for financial reasons, (c) vacancies for fully-trained neonatal nurses, (d) training places for neonatal nurses available in each year from 1987 and (e) training places for neonatal nurses filled in each year from 1987.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested at parts (b) to (e) is not collected centrally. The latest information on the daily average numbers of neonatal cots which are not in a maternity unit is set out in the table. It should be noted, however, that some health authorities also provide intensive care facilities within maternity units.

NHS Negligence

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will outline his plans for introducing an arbitration procedure for cases in which negligence must be proven; and if he will make a statement further to his remarks during the debate on second reading of the Health Service (Compensation) Bill.

Mr. Waldegrave: On 1 February I announced that I would be prepared to undertake consultations on whether an arbitration procedure could be established within the national health service which may provide quicker, cheaper and simpler avenues for the informal resolution of disputes. I shall bring forward proposals in due course.

Salmonella

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will circulate a copy of his reply to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West on 22 January, Official Report, column 162, on anti-salmonella guidelines to all national health service district managers.

Mr. Dorrell: No.

Correspondence

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average time his Department takes to answer letters from hon. and right hon. Members.

Mr. Dorrell: Twenty-nine days for the 7,600 letters dealt with in the last six months.

Cyclosporin and AZT

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what sums of money have been provided by his Department towards funding Cyclosporin and AZT.

Mr. Dorrell: The costs of providing Cyclosporin and AZT within the health service are not available centrally. It is for health authorities to identify needs for the drugs and make suitable provision.

Funds for treating AIDS patients are allocated to regions on the basis of the number of live AIDS cases within the region and the cost of AZT is met from those allocations. Unlike transplants, the treatment of AIDS has been concentrated in certain regions.

Community Care

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his response to the contents of the recent report on the causes and consequences of the community care delays, published jointly by the King's Fund Institute, the Joseph Rowntree Foundation and the Nuffield Institute, a copy of which he has been sent.

Mr. Dorrell: I reaffirm the Governments commitment to the policy as set out in the White Paper "Caring for People". The timetable for its implementation will remain as stated to the House by my right hon. and learned Friend the then Secretary of State in July 1990. We welcome the continued enthusiasm of the authors of the report for our policy.

Pasteurised Eggs

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance he has given to national health service district general managers on the use of pasteurised eggs in recipes for lightly cooked egg products.

Mr. Dorrell: Guidance given in our press release of 21 November 1988 notifies the procedures that should be adopted when producing lightly cooked eggs. This coupled with our earlier advice, in our circular letter EL(88)P/136 of 29 July 1988, on storage and on the use of raw shell eggs in recipes is still extant, a copy is available in the Library.

Incontinence Pads

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 5 February to the hon. Member for Wakefield, Official Report, column 96, if health authorities are empowered to charge for the supply of incontinence pads to individual residents in private nursing homes.

Mr. Dorrell: While Departmental guidance to health authorities is that they should not supply incontinence pads to private nursing home residents, there is nothing in law to prevent it. If health authorities were to supply them, they would not be allowed to charge.

Transplants

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people are currently awaiting a kidney transplant, a heart transplant, a heart and lung transplant, a lung transplant, a liver transplant and any other form of transplant; and what is the present supply situation for each of these categories.

Mr. Dorrell: According to information provided by the United Kingdom transplant service the number of patients awaiting transplants as at 11 February 1991 were:

	Number
Kidney	3,678
Pancreas	5
Kidney and pancreas	16
Heart	241
Lung	67
Heart and lung	225
Liver	69
Cornea	579

The number of organs retrieved for transplant were:

	1989	1990 (provisional)	Percentage change
Kidney	1,923	1,932	<1
Heart	281	305	+ 9
Heart and lung	86	95	+10
Lung	31	51	+65
Liver	345	406	+17
Cornea	2,729	2,966	+ 9

Kidney Patients

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will be replying to the letter from the hon. Member for Newbury of 16 January about a meeting with officers of the National Federation of Kidney Patients Associations.

Mr. Waldegrave: As my hon. Friend knows from my letter to him of 13 February, I never received his letter of 16 January.

My office will, of course, be in touch with him about a meeting.

Smoked Fish

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether there are any reported cases of poisoning as a result of the consumption of smoked fish sent through the post in the last 25 years.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave him on 21 January at column 76.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

International Institute for Democracy

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those member countries of the Council of Europe which have contributed to the International Institute for Democracy since its establishment in 1988, stating the total amount pledged to the most recent date.

Mr. Garel-Jones: As at 12 February 1991 the following Council of Europe member states had contributed to the International Institute for Democracy:

Belgium
Cyprus
Denmark
Finland
France
Iceland
Italy
Liechtenstein
Malta
Netherlands
Norway
Portugal
Spain
Sweden
Switzerland
Turkey

The total pledged to date amounts to FF563,072·64, including contributions from Australia and the Centre for Democracy, Washington.

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Her Majesty's Government propose to contribute to the work of the International Institute for Democracy established by the Council of Europe in 1988; and what size of contribution he has in mind.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We have no plans to contribute to the work of this institute.

Illegal Arms and Ammunition

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what provisions control the circumstances in which entry to a foreign mission in the United Kingdom can be authorised in order to check for the presence of illegal arms or ammunition.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Article 22 of the Vienna convention on diplomatic relations provides that the premises of the mission shall be inviolable, and that the agents of the receiving state may not enter them except with consent of the head of mission.

The same article provides that the receiving state is under a special duty to take all appropriate steps to protect the premises of the mission against any intrusion or damage.

Foreign Diplomats

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the limitations on the powers of the police to apprehend and search for arms and ammunition foreign diplomats leaving their foreign mission in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Article 29 of the Vienna convention on diplomatic relations provides that the person of a diplomatic agent shall be inviolable and that he shall not be liable to any form of arrest or detention. Article 41 of the convention provides that it is the duty of all persons enjoying such privileges and immunities to respect the laws and regulations of the receiving state.

We have made clear to all missions in London that it is the duty of the police to prevent the unauthorised carriage of firearms, and that persons suspected of carrying firearms are likely to be questioned.

Diplomatic Relations

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether it is the practice when diplomatic relations have been terminated with a foreign country for Her Majesty's Government to accept the nomination of any other foreign country with a recognised mission in the United Kingdom as protector of the interests of the first country; and what freedom to decline to accept such arrangements is available to Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In accordance with articles 45 and 46 of the Vienna convention on diplomatic relations, when diplomatic relations have been broken off with a foreign country, Her Majesty's Government as the receiving state, will consider the nomination by the sending state, of a third state to assume the role of a protecting power. It is for Her Majesty's Government alone to decide whether or not the nomination is acceptable.

Nuclear Weapons Tests

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what date the United Kingdom presented its statement to the plenary session of the recent amendment conference of states who are parties to the treaty banning nuclear weapons tests in the atmosphere, in outer space and underwater; who led the United Kingdom delegation; what response was made to the United Kingdom statement by other participating delegations; to whom the statement has been circulated; what was the total cost of United Kingdom participation in the conference; what meetings were held with non-governmental organisations in attendance as observers; and what representations from non-governmental organisations were received by the United Kingdom delegation to the conference.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom statement to the plenary session was delivered on 11 January; the United Kingdom delegation was led by the deputy head of the United Kingdom delegation to the conference on disarmament at Geneva; the statement was the last to be delivered to the plenary session and produced no subsequent response in the committee of the whole; it was circulated to participating delegations, non-governmental organisations and the press; the total cost of United Kingdom participation was approximately £20,000; an informal session of the conference was allocated for NGOs to state their views; the United Kingdom delegation received several representations from NGOs and held informal meetings with as many as possible.

Hadj

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consultations he has had with the appropriate Saudi Arabian authorities concerning arrangements for British Muslims wishing to visit holy places during Hadj; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The question of pass quotas for pilgrims is a matter for the Saudi Ministry of the Hadj, who assess quotas on a country-by country basis. We have asked the British embassy in Riyadh to contact the Ministry to find out what plans have been made for this year's pilgrimage. I will tell the hon. Member of the outcome.

Myanmar

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps Her Majesty's Government have taken to prevent the supply of Rolls-Royce engines, via Yugoslavia, to the security forces in Myanmar.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have made representations to the Yugoslav authorities about the re-export of this equipment to Burma.

Hong Kong

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to Hong Kong on the need to ensure that the existing de facto abolition of the death penalty in Hong Kong is confirmed in legislation for the territory before 1997.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: There are no plans to change the present situation.

The Gulf (RSPCA)

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance was offered by his Department to the RSPCA team visiting the Gulf to assist in the cleaning of oil-damaged seabirds and mammals.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are pleased to say that this Department was able to pay the return air fares of the RSPCA experts vising Saudi Arabia and other countries in the Gulf affected by this monstrous act of environmental terrorism. In consultation with the Saudi authorities through the British embassy in Riyadh, this Department also assisted with a number of administrative arrangements prior to the team's departure.

Nuclear Material

Mr. Bob Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the statement of October 1990 about a black market operating in nuclear materials outside of safeguards controls, if he will make it his policy to seek further information from the chairman of Argentina's Comision Nacional de Energia Atomica.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 31 January 1991]: Since 1985, it has been the declared policy of the Government of Argentina to insist that IAEA safeguards are applied to all nuclear material and equipment exported from Argentina.

SCOTLAND

Fishing

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to review the effect of the recently introduced restrictions in catching opportunities imposed on the Scottish inshore fleet by the recent EC tie-up scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Monitoring of the uptake of the United Kingdom quotas is carried out by Fisheries Departments as a matter of course throughout the year. We will continue to monitor the effects of the requirement for vessels to remain in port for eight consecutive days per month. In addition, discussions have now been concluded successfully with the European Commission to enable fishermen to use more selective fishing gear as an alternative to remaining in port.

Homelessness

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the special measures taken by Her Majesty's Government to protect homeless people in Scotland from the recent bad weather conditions; and if he will make it his policy to collect urgently and centrally information about the number of people sleeping rough.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Local authorities, with their statutory responsibilities for helping the homeless and for dealing with emergencies, are best placed to determine the measures needed in their areas and to take appropriate action. Local authority housing and social work departments have not given us evidence to indicate that sleeping rough is a significant problem in their areas; while precise figures on the number of people sleeping rough are not available, advice from local authorities and voluntary bodies is that the number in Scotland at any one time is very small. Arrangements are being made to enumerate those sleeping rough on census night, 21 April 1991.

Housing

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the level of housing support grant paid by his Department to each local authority in Scotland in (a) cash terms, and (b) real terms at 1991-92 prices.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The housing support grant entitlements of individual local authorities, in cash terms and at 1991-92 prices, are shown in the following tables.

DEFENCE

Research Grants

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the total amount of money spent on the Joint Research Council/Ministry of Defence research grants scheme in each financial year since 1985 and how much of this was spent specifically by the Ministry of Defence.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The annual expenditure by the Ministry of Defence on the Joint Research Council/MOD research grants scheme in each financial year since 1985 is as follows:

1985-86	nil
1986-87	110,559
1987-88	870,654
1988-89	2,078,082
1989-90	3,256,617
1990-91	[1]5,250,000

[1] Estimate.

The amount of research council commitment is a matter for the councils themselves.

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the areas of research identified as high priority under the directed mode component of the Joint Research Council/Ministry of Defence research grants scheme.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: To date the scheme has operated in responsive mode only.

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many research grants currently exist under the Joint Research Council/Ministry of Defence research grants scheme; how many universities and polytechnics currently hold these grants; and what is their total value.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: There are currently 426 Joint RC/MOD research grants involving 61 universities and polytechnics. The total MOD contribution to these awards amounts to £20·5 million.

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many research grants have been awarded under the Joint Research Council/Ministry of Defence research grants scheme in each financial year since 1985;

(2) how many research grants have been awarded in each financial year since 1985 under the Joint Research Council/Ministry of Defence research grants scheme specifically in conjunction with (a) the Science and Engineering Research Council, (b) the Medical Research Council, (c) Natural Environment Research Council (d) Agricultural and Food Research Council and (e) Economic and Social Research Council.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The figures requested are as follows. No joint grant awards have been made with the Agricultural and Food Research Council.

Year	SERC	NERC	ESRC	MRC	Total
1985-86	—	—	—	—	—
1986-87	65	5	—	—	70
1987-88	35	7	—	—	42
1988-89	73	6	—	3	82
1989-90	141	6	5	1	153
[1]1990-91	83	1	1	1	86

[1] To date.

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much money the Ministry of Defence originally planned to spend on the Joint Research Council/Ministry of Defence research grants scheme in each financial year since 1985.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: It was envisaged that MOD funding to the scheme would build up progressively to some £5 million per annum.

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence to which of the Science and Engineering Research

Council's interdisciplinary research centres his Department has providing funding; what amount of funding has been provided; and for what purpose.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Ministry of Defence currently provides funding to one of the Science and Engineering Research Council's interdisciplinary research centres. It is not our policy to give further details of these arrangements.

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which of the Ministry of Defence's research establishments have been involved in the Joint Research Council/Ministry of Defence research grants scheme.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The following have been involved:

Admiralty Research Establishment
Atomic Weapons Establishment
Chemical Defence Establishment
Royal Aerospace Establishment
Royal Armament Research and Development Establishment
Royal Signals and Radar Establishment
Stores and Clothing Research and Development Establishment

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what links there have been in the last three years between the Ministry of Defence and the research councils.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Contributions are made to grants for work of relevance to defence under the Joint Research Council/Ministry of Defence research grants scheme. Also the MOD and the Science and Engineering Research Council co-fund awards to certain students who are jointly supervised by their university and the defence research establishments. MOD staff sit as members or assessors on certain research council committees and panels.

Machrihanish Air Base

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement regarding the future of the Machrihanish air base.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are no plans to change the role of RAF Machrihanish for the foreseeable future. It is established to support United States Navy maritime patrol operations in war.

Low Flying

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of low-flying activity over the United Kingdom since 1 October 1990 has been carried out by foreign air forces other than those of the United States.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Between 1 October 1990 and 31 December 1991 (the most recent date for which statistics are available) flights by foreign aircraft, other than those of the United States Air Force based in this country, represented under 1 per cent. of the total number of flights in the United Kingdom low flying system.

AWE Aldermaston

Sir Michaeal McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what amounts of untreated nuclear waste are currently being stored at atomic weapons establishment Aldermaston; how soon a safe disposal site will be found for it; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: MOD policy is to dispose of radioactive waste via nationally available disposal routes wherever reasonably practicable. However for certain categories of waste, MOD, like the civil nuclear industry awaits the availability of a safe national disposal site such as the deep repository being planned by UK Nirex Ltd. for operation in 2005. Until that time, MOD is following the practice adopted by most nuclear sites in the United Kingdom of storing waste for which there is no current disposal route at the site where it is produced. About 2,000 cu m of untreated radioactive waste are currently stored at the atomic weapons establishment at Aldermaston, pending the availability of the deep repository. It is stored in closed containers in purpose-built facilities which are subject to regular monitoring and surveillance, and it constitutes no danger to the public, the work force or the environment. Treatment of waste is only performed when it is clear that this will result in a waste form which is likely to be acceptable for disposal.

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the routine site management at atomic weapons establishment Aldermaston and particularly on safety checks; and if he will publish the manpower target for the establishment and its current staff total.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Since the implementation of the Interim Management Contract on 1 October 1990 management of the AWE Aldermaston site has been the responsibility of a new management team comprising experienced managers seconded from Hunting-BRAE and existing senior personnel who have long experience of AWE operations. This management team is tasked with ensuring the most effective overall management of AWE, concentrating initially on manufacturing work and site services, whilst complying with appropriate safeguards for health and safety and security. The routine safety checks carried out at AWE include the personal monitoring of individuals, the monitoring of their working environment and the monitoring of the public and general environment for radiation, radioactive, and other potentially dangerous substances, as appropriate. The frequency and intensity of such monitoring programmes are arranged to be capable of timely detection of exposures to hazards at levels very substantially below limits and constraints set by legislation. The monitoring data obtained confirm that such very low levels continue to be achieved.

These procedures continue to demonstrate that a safe working and public environment is maintained at AWE sites and that the sites do not constitute dangers to the workers or the public.

It is not our policy to release details of manpower figures.

Ministry Employees (Northern Ireland)

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will consider providing financial compensation for Ministry of Defence employees working in Northern Ireland similar to that provided for civilians carrying out work under contract at Ministry of Defence locations in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I can confirm that officials are currently considering a scheme to alleviate the stress and strain experienced by MOD employees in Northern Ireland.

B52 Bombers

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will ensure that unexploded bombs discharged into the Bristol channel by returning B52s from Iraq will be positioned sufficiently far from the north Devon coastline to cause no injury or trauma to people or animals on land or at sea.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are no agreed arrangements for B52 aircraft returning from Iraq to discharge unexploded bombs into the Bristol channel. However, as I indicated in the House on 13 February at columns 849-52, an established military danger area off Hartland Point seaward of the Bristol channel has been activated full time, to be used in the unlikely event that a B52 from RAF Fairford encountered an emergency shortly after take-off which required it to jettison its weapons. Appropriate notices to mariners and airmen have been issued, and every step would be taken in an emergency to ensure that there was no risk to other aircraft, shipping or people.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what instructions the United States Air Force has given to the crews of B52 bombers on dropping unused bombs within United Kingdom territorial waters.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: B52 aircrews have been instructed that, in the unlikely event of an emergency after take-off from RAF Fairford which makes it necessary to jettison their weapons, they must declare an emergency on the radio frequency in use and then proceed, under air traffic control, to the established military danger area off Hartland Point. Before jettisoning ordnance the aircrew must ensure by the use of radar and visual checks that the area is clear of shipping and other aircraft, and must fully avoid the island of Lundy.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what advice he has given to seafarers using the Bristol channel of the possible danger of damaged B52 bombers dropping their unused bombs.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A radio navigation warning has been issued advising that the possibility of aircraft jettisoning weapons exists within an established military danger area to the west of Hartland Point and that warnings to leave the area may be issued at short notice on VHF radio. Action has been taken to ensure that this information is relayed to all seafarers who may use the area.

The Gulf

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make arrangements to enable British forces serving in the Gulf to receive religious material; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Appropriate arrangements have been made for the pastoral and spiritual care of our forces in the Gulf.

War Graves

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the work intended to be carried out under the agreement concerning the Mosul war cemetery replacement has been completed to the satisfaction of the agreement signed on 30 October 1989, as set out in Cm. 1399.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In July 1990 the Iraqi Government informed the Commonwealth War Graves Commission that the work at the Mosul war cemetery had been completed, but it has not been possible for Commission staff to visit Iraq to confirm this.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his reply, 31 January, Official Report, column 592, if he will set out (a) in calculating the average central cost component of annual maintenance grant for the existing grant-maintained schools, how many local education authorities were involved and (b) the average value expressed as a percentage of the direct spending commitment of central annual maintenance grant based on returns from local education authorities for which section 42 information is available.

Mr. Eggar: There are 50 existing grant-maintained schools situated in 34 local education authority areas. The calculation of the average central cost component of annual maintenance grant for 1990-91 was based on budget information from those 34 local education authorities. We have not calculated annual maintenance grant figures for local education authorities where there is no grant-maintained school. It would be disproportionately costly to do so.

Outdoor Education Centres

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to amend the provisions for local management of schools so as to secure the funding of outdoor education centres; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: Under local management of schools it is for individual local education authorities to decide whether to delegate the funding of outdoor education centres to schools. Delegation need not affect the future of the centres, provided that they offer schools good educational value for money.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the role of outdoor education centres in the provisions of the national curriculum.

Mr. Eggar: The delivery of the national curriculum is a matter for schools to determine. It would be open to schools to make use of outdoor education centres in delivering the national curriculum, but they could not be required to do so under the terms of the Education Reform Act.

Kirklees Metropolitan Council

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the standard spending assessment for education for Kirklees metropolitan council for 1991-92; and what it was for 1990-91.

Mr. Fallon: The education component of the 1990-91 standard spending assessment for Kirklees metropolitan council is £128·823 million. The figure for 1991-92 is £148·129 million, an increase of 15 per cent.

Research Councils

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the financial allocations to the Research Councils for 1991-92, identifying programmes and capital programmes earmarked in advance by Government; and what were the comparable allocations in the three previous years in real terms.

Mr. Alan Howarth [pursuant to his reply, 8 February 1991, c. 256]: I regret that there were some errors in the figures given in the original answer.

The corrected answer is as follows:

The allocations to the five research councils for 1991-92 announced on 24 January are as follows:

	£ million
AFRC	93·4
ESRC	35·5
MRC	200·4
NERC	122·6
SERC	451·3

None of the additional amounts announced this year was allocated to particular programmes in advance. The sums so allocated to particular programmes for 1991-92 in earlier settlements were as follows; redundancy costs as a result of reductions in MAFF research commissions £6·0 million (AFRC), AIDS £8·5 million (MRC), British Antarctic Survey (BAS) £6·2 million (NERC), British Geological Survey (BGS) £7·0 million (NERC), CERN £7·3 million (SERC), ERS2 instruments £2·0 million (SERC).

For the three preceding years the total grant to each council and the sums specifically allocated in earlier settlements (at 1991-92 prices) were as follows:

£ million

Council	Grant in Aid	Specific Allocations
1990-91
AFRC	91·8	MAFF 4·2
ESRC	38·4	—
MRC	196·8	AIDS 8·5

NATIONAL FINANCE

Fuel Prices

Mr. Michael: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will make it his policy to achieve a differential between diesel and petrol prices which is comparable with the differential experienced within European competitor countries.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I cannot anticipate my right hon. Friend's Budget statement.

Community Charge

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the increase in the standard rate of income tax which would be necessary to yield the same revenue as his estimate of the yield of the community charge in 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Norman Lamont: For 1990-91 local authorities community charge yield (gross) is budgeted at £14 billion (GB). For 1991-92 budgeted figures are not yet available. However, if all authorities spend in line with standard spending assessments the estimated gross yield of the community charge would be £14·5 billion (GB).

On this basis, the estimated yield net of community charge benefit, transitional relief and the community charge reduction scheme is £11·4 billion in 1990-91 and £10·6 billion in 1991-92.

To yield the same net revenue the standard rate of income tax would need to be increased by around 7½p for 1990-91 and around 5½p for 1991-92.

THE ARTS

Departmental Achievements

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement on the principal achievements of his Department since June 1987.

Mr. Renton: The Government's achievements in the Arts since 1987 have been numerous and varied. Among the most important I would list:

The growth in central Government support for arts activities. By 1991-92, planned expenditure will have increased in real terms by 16 per cent. since 1987-88.

The establishment of a three-year programme of funding for the arts, and the introduction of measures to encourage greater self-reliance among arts institutions.

Following a comprehensive review, key decisions have been announced on the reform of the structure of the funding of the arts. The new system, which will start to be introduced over the next year, will provide more effective co-ordination of overall funding policy and strengthened accountability over the use of large and growing sums of public money, to the ultimate benefit of both the arts and the taxpayer.

The introduction and development of corporate planning for the national museums and galleries and other non-departmental bodies, linked to the three-year funding programme.

The major expansion schemes at some national museums and galleries, including the Clore gallery at the Tate, the new Tate gallery in Liverpool, the redevelopment of the Imperial War Museum, and the new Sainsbury wing at the National Gallery, due to open in the spring.

The setting up of the museums and galleries improvement fund—a joint initiative between Government and the Wolfson Charities, providing £4 million per year for the next three years towards the cost of priority renovation and refurbishment projects in United Kingdom museums and galleries.

New marketing initiatives to encourage arts bodies to market themselves more professionally and improve the quality of their management.

The significant upsurge in, and continued success of, business sponsorship of the arts. The business sponsorship incentive scheme has brought over £38 million of new money to the arts.

The development of incentive funding schemes for the performing arts and for public libraries, designed to encourage publicly-funded bodies to become more self-reliant in their development and growth.

The substantial progress made with the British Library's St. Pancras project. The first phase is on schedule for occupation in 1993, within its cash budget of £300 million. Books will be moved into the basements from mid-1991. And detailed design is in progress on the second phase, which will be completed in 1996. The cost of the whole project will be £450 million in cash. When the building is fully occupied, the bulk of the British Library's London-based collections will have been brought together for the first time and in modern storage conditions.

The publication of the consultative paper, "Financing our Public Library Service: Four subjects for debate", prompting possibly the widest debate on the service this century, and resulting in the protection of the core of the free public library service, through the Local Government and Housing Act 1989.

EMPLOYMENT

Claimant Statistics

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment for the monthly statistical periods since April 1990; if he will show for each region, and for each adjudication section in London, and for Great Britain as a whole, the number of claimants who had (a) been issued with warning letters for not actively seeking work, (b) had their claims referred to an adjudication officer for not actively seeking work, (c) had their claims (i) allowed and (ii) disallowed, (d) had their claims referred to an adjudication officer for refusing suitable employment and (e) been disqualified for refusing suitable employment.

Mr. Jackson: Questions on operational matters in the employment service executive agency are the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

Farm Accidents

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (i) deaths and (ii) accidents there have been on farms in Wales involving machinery and farm practices for each of the years from 1983.

Mr. Forth: The information is not available in the form requested.

The following table shows the number of fatal and other injuries occurring in the agriculture and horticulture industry in Wales from 1986-87 to 1989-90 (provisional) as reported under the Reporting of Injuries, Disease and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985 to the Health and Safety Executive's factory and agricultural inspectorates:

Year (commencing 1 April)	Fatal		Major		Over three day
	Total	of which involving machinery	Total	of which involving machinery	Total	of which involving machinery
1986-87	7	—	29	4	27	3
1987-88	4	2	34	3	51	5
1988-89	12	1	45	8	50	2
1989-90[1]	7	—	34	4	54	6

[1] Provisional.

Information for earlier years was reported under different legislation and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Health and Safety (Agriculture)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement concerning health and safety in the agricultural industry.

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for health and safety in the agricultural industry rests with employers and others at the workplace.

The Health and Safety Executive is pursuing a number of strategies aimed at helping the industry to achieve reductions in the numbers of accidents.

These include: targeting inspection at those workplaces that present the greatest risk to employees, the self employed, their families and the general public including children; carrying out advisory and publicity work to promote an increased awareness of health and safety in the industry; liaising with all sides of industry to improve the health and safety aspects of products.

In seeking compliance with health and safety legislation, inspectors are using innovative inspection techniques including initiatives targeted at specific farming operations. They will also pay more attention to the management of health and safety.

Inspectors pursue their enquiries and any enforcement action to the highest levels at workplaces which do not measure up to the standards expected of them.

Employment Training

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will estimate how many people with special needs will lose places in employment training schemes as a result of reductions in the employment training budget in the next financial year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: My Department does not forecast the number of people with special training needs likely to enter employment training (ET).

Restart

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will update the information on Restart provided in response to the question by the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn), Official Report, 6 June 1990, column 666

Mr. Jackson: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service Executive Agency are the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

Job Release Scheme

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will announce the results of the review of the rates of allowance payable under the job release scheme.

Mr. Jackson: Although the job release scheme closed to new applicants on 31 January 1988, the allowance will continue to be paid to participants for up to five years. Following our annual review, the allowances payable from 8 April 1991 under the job release scheme will be as follows:

Those who are married with a dependent wife whose net income from all sources does not exceed £16 a week; £90·70 taxable. Those who do not have a dependent wife or whose wife's income exceeds £16 a week: £74·70 taxable. The spouses earnings limit which affects whether the higher or lower rate is paid has been raised to £16 from £15.

Social Action Programme

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the European Commission's proposals under the social action programme on (a) informing and consulting employees and (b) proof of employment relationship.

Mr. Howard: Proposals for directives on informing and consulting employees in Community-scale undertakings and on proof of employment relationship were adopted by the European Commission on 5 December and 28 November 1990 respectively. Consultation documents inviting views on both proposals are to be issued by my Department today. Copies have been placed in the library of the House .

Training and Enterprise Councils

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what labour market and geographical criteria have been used in allocating budgets to individual training and enterprise councils; what weight was given to each of the criteria; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Budget allocations to individual training and enterprise councils (TECs) are based broadly on historical spending levels in the geographical area covered by the TEC (80 per cent. of the weighting) and on the size of the client groups within the TEC's area for the programmes involved (20 per cent. of the weighting). Each TEC's budget may be adjusted according to local factors, which will be subject to negotiation between the TEC and the Department's regional director.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he first received the corporate plan of South Glamorgan TEC.

Mr. Jackson [holding reply 14 February 1991]: A draft of the corporate plan for South Glamorgan TEC was first received by officials on 24 September 1990.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Local Offices

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what plans he has to alter the operation, or relocate workloads, from or to the Paisley or Johnstone offices of his Department;

(2) what plans there are to reduce staffing levels in the Johnstone office of his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The operations and workloads of both offices are currently being considered by local management to identify the most appropriate arrangements to meet future local needs. The review of these offices is part of a much larger review involving all offices in Great Britain. It is not a device for closing them. Restructuring of the network will result in modest savings, mainly at grade 7 level. A voluntary redundancy scheme is in place for these staff.

Sexual Equality

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security which benefits do not fall within the scope of EC directive 79/7/ regarding equal treatment of men and women within social security matters.

Miss Widdecombe: Article 3(1) of directive 79/7 EEC sets out what is covered by the terms of the directive, namely statutory schemes which provide protection against the risks of sickness, invalidity, old age, accidents at work and occupational diseases and unemployment. It also covers social assistance which is intended to supplement or replace those schemes.

Articles 3(2) and 7 define what is or can be excluded; notably state pensionable age.

Disability

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, further to his answer of 11 December 1990 at columns 37-77, if he will now review the mobility allowance provisions regarding the award of the benefit to the deaf-blind.

Mr. Scott: I assume that the hon. Member refers to the undertaking that I gave on 13 December 1990 at column 91 to analyse the way in which arrangements for deaf-blind people are working in practice and consider whether changes are necessary. This has now been done and immediate steps are being taken to overcome some problems which were discovered.

We intend to issue revised guidance to examining doctors to resolve these difficulties and plan to consult both SENSE (the National Deaf-Blind and Rubella Association) and the RNIB (Royal National Institute for the Blind) to make this guidance as effective as possible. We shall continue to monitor the operation of the deaf-blind rules after these changes have been made.

Severe Weather Payments

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the first severe weather payments, authorisied under the Prime Minister's announcement of 7 February 1991, Official Report, columns 408-9, will be made.

Mr. Scott: Some payments have already been made.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the locations where temperatures did not trigger off any cold weather payments in the week commencing 4 February.

Mr. Scott: The 24 weather stations listed in the table did not trigger. However, 7 February is deemed to be the trigger day for all weather stations which did not actually trigger, and all DSS offices have been instructed to action claims for cold weather payments.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if money saved by a pensioner towards funeral costs is taken into account when pensioners on income support apply for the cold weather payment; and what discretion is given to DSS offices on this.

Mr. Scott: The first £1,000 savings of anyone aged over 60 or over (or who has a partner who is 60 or over) are ignored. Any savings above that figure, for whatever purpose, are taken into account. The treatment of savings is set out in the Social Fund Cold Weather Payments (General) Regulations 1988 and DSS offices have no discretion in this area.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if his Department is taking steps to advertise in the national and provincial press and on television and radio the cold weather payments available to those who are eligible.

Mr. Scott: Advertisements containing a form for eligible people to claim cold weather payments began to appear in Scottish local and regional newspapers in January and in England and Wales from 4 February. From Friday 15 February advertisements will also appear in appropriate national newspapers. Advertising space has not been taken on commercial television or radio but considerable publicity has been given to the payments through these media.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is his estimate of the number of households who will receive a severe weather payment under the terms of the Prime Minister's announcement of 7 February 1991, Official Report, columns 408-9;

(2) what is his estimate of the number of households who would be eligible to claim severe weather payments in a week in which the seven consecutive days' temperature requirement is waived.

Mr. Scott: We estimate that about 2·2 million households are eligible to receive a cold weather payment for a week in which all the weather stations trigger or are deemed to trigger. The number who will receive a payment depends on the number who claim. We are undertaking extensive advertising to ensure that eligible people are aware of the payments.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the number of DSS offices who have paid out cold weather payments; and what is this as a percentage of all offices.

Mr. Scott: All DSS offices have been instructed to make cold weather payments.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the number of pensioners who are likely to be eligible for the cold weather payments; and what percentage of total pensioners this is.

Mr. Scott: We estimate that nearly 1·5 million people of pensionable age[1] are eligible to receive a cold weather payment, representing around 13 per cent. of the total number of people of pensionable age.

[1] Men aged 65 and over, and women aged 60 and over.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security under what legislation the Prime Minister's announcement of 7 February 1991, Official Report, columns 408-9, on cold weather payments, will be enacted.

Mr. Scott: My right hon. Friend announced our intention to increase by £1 the weekly amount currently available under the Social Fund Cold Weather Payments (General) Regulations 1988. Amending regulations will be laid shortly.

Where a local weather station has triggered, local offices are instructed to make payments of £6, of which £5 is within the current statutory framework and the additional £1 is on an extra statutory basis. In areas where the local weather station has not triggered, ex gratia payments of £6 will be made.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how long the current waiving of the cold weather payments regulations will endure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister announced on 12 February we shall continue to monitor the situation carefully and if the exceptionally cold weather continues we shall take similar measures.

Pensioners

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the total number of pensioners who do not claim income support to which they would be entitled; and how many of these have savings below £1,000.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is not available. Estimates of take-up for the income-related benefits introduced following the 1988 reforms will be published in due course from the 1989 family expenditure survey.

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the number of pensioners claiming income support who have savings of less than £1,000.

Miss Widdecombe: We estimate that, including partners, there are nearly 1·5 million people of pensionable age[1] claiming income support who have savings of less than £1,000.

(Source: Annual Statistical Enquiry 1989)

[1] Men aged 65 and over, and women aged 60 and over.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what guidance has been issued to local offices about the recipients of invalidity benefit undertaking voluntary work following the supplementary evidence submitted by his Department to the Public Accounts Committee subsequent to the appearance of the Permanent Secretary at the Public Accounts Committee on 7 February.

Mr. Scott: Revised instructions about the effect of voluntary work on entitlement to incapacity benefits were issued to the Department's social security offices in May 1990. The guidance gave examples of the type of voluntary work which could be ignored and stressed the need not to discourage claimants from taking on such work by delay in giving advice or decisions.

As the supplementary evidence submitted to the Public Accounts Committee explained, decisions on entitlement to incapacity benefits, such as invalidity benefit, are made by the independent statutory adjudicating authorities.

WALES

Mental Handicap

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has any plans to amend the guidelines for implementing the all-Wales strategy for the development of services for people with a mental handicap.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The basic guidelines on implementing the all-Wales strategy remain unchanged and are set out in the original strategy document published in March 1983.

Administrative guidance—covering for example the format and content of annual reports and of three-year forward plans under the strategy—is issued to county joint planning teams and updated each year. A copy of the latest version of the guidelines has been placed in the Library of the House. A comprehensive review of the strategy is in progress and involves wide consultation. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will consider, in the light of the review, what arrangements should be made to maintain and further develop services beyond the strategy's original 10-year term.

Regional Enterprise Grants

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the number and value of applications for regional enterprise grants in Wales by each quarter of 1989 and 1990.

Mr. David Hunt: The information is as follows:

Period	Scheme	Number of applications	Project costs (application stage) (£'000)
1 January to 31 March 1989	RIG	127	11,979

RIG = Regional investment grant.
RIN = Regional innovation grant.

Sheep Farming

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning sheep farming in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: The Welsh sheep industry contributes about 24 per cent. of the total value of agricultural output. The breeding flock has expanded steadily—by nearly a million—over the last decade and now stands at 5·1 million head. In 1991, sheep producers in the LFA will benefit from substantial increases in the rate of HLCA payments and a supplement of 4 ecu to the sheep annual premium which together will increase the support payments to producers in Wales by £18 million.

Cattle Rearing

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning cattle rearing in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: Figures relating to the size of the cattle rearing herd in Wales since 1986 and the value of the output are shown in the table:

	Dairy breeding herd (thousand head)	Percentage change over previous years	Beef breeding herd (thousand head)	Percentage change over previous years	Value of output (£ thousands)	Percentage change over previous years

Pigs, Plants and Poultry

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning (i) pig rearing, (ii) horticulture and (iii) the poultry industry in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: Figures for the number of pigs and poultry and for the area of horticulture crops together with the value of their output in Wales in each of the five years since 1986 are as given in the following tables:

Pig rearing

	Total breeding herd (Thousand head)	Percentage change over previous year	Value of Output £ (thousands)	Percentage change over previous year

Dairy Industry

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy concerning the dairy industry in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: I recognise the importance of the dairy industry to Welsh agriculture. I will continue to seek to ensure that the industry is able to compete effectively and on equal terms with its counterparts in other member states.

Training

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he proposes to give encouragement to individuals to improve their skills.

Mr. David Hunt: The seven training and enterprise councils in Wales are all developing proposals to encourage individuals to improve their skills and increase their commitment to their own training and self development. The investors in people aimed at encouraging employers to plan, act and review the training needs of all their employees. Career development loans offer valuable help to individuals who wish to train but lack the financial means to do so and the professional industrial and commercial updating programme recognises the need of employed people for training and aims to update the skills of the Welsh workforce. We have also introduced a new initiative to improve the literacy and numeracy skills of the unemployed and those in work which will be overseen by the adult literacy and basic skills unit and will involve a series of pilot projects in England and Wales.

Our education reforms are designed to raise the standards of young people in schools and will ensure that all pupils follow a curriculum designed to encourage them to achieve their full potential and prepare them for work. Pupils of all abilities should have a full opportunity to have a vocational start to their studies. The vocational examining bodies have been invited to play a key part in this by offering qualifications relating to the whole of the national curriculum or relevant aspects of it. The training credit pilots should encourage young people to take responsibility for their own training. We will be monitoring the achievements of the pilot to assess their impact on young people's motivation.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he proposes to meet Sir Bryan Wolfson of the national training task force to discuss improved skills training in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: Welsh Office Ministers regularly discuss skills training in Wales with Sir Melvyn Rosser, who is a member of the national training task force.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he proposes to meet members of the CBI and TUC to discuss training in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I have already discussed training in Wales with both bodies and expect to do so again when next I meet them.

Hospital Closures

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidelines he has issued to the chairmen of the Welsh health authorities concerning capital expenditure dependent on hospital closures being initiated by them before he has made public his verdict on these proposed hospital closures.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: District health authorities are well aware of the need to be able to defend any investment decisions they make in both value for money and service terms.

Glan Ely Hospital

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the South Glamorgan health authority regarding expenditure on upgrading wards at the Prince of Wales orthopaedic hospital Rhydlafar, to accommodate geriatric patients now at Glan Ely Hospital, prior to any announcement from him regarding the future at Glan Ely hospital.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: None.

NHS Property Holding Agency

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the estimated cost of the national health service property holding agency for Wales in its first full year of operation.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave on 16 January 1991 at col. 520 and to the letter sent to him on 16 January 1991 by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, a copy of which was placed in the Library of the House.

Since the principles have not yet been agreed on which to take forward consultation, it is not possible to provide the information requested.

Health Service

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was (a) the number of cancelled operating sessions, (b) the number of operating sessions and (c) the average number of operations per session in each health authority in the latest available year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Education

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many qualified teachers of (a) art and (b) computer studies there are in the high schools of Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Information on the numbers of teachers and their qualifications is given in the Welsh Education Statistics Bulletin: No. 7 Secondary School Staffing Survey (1989), copies of which are available in the House of Commons Library. Table 5.5 provides an analysis of a teacher's highest qualification in any subject.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what initiatives he has taken to assist local education authorities in Wales to provide computer studies courses; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: A five-year strategy was introduced in 1988 to encourage the use of information technology across the whole curriculum. Funding under the education support grant and local education training grant (LEATGS) schemes for the purchase of computer hardware for schools, employment of advisory teachers and teacher training programmes has supported expenditure of £5·7 million since 1988. Further expenditure in excess of £2·3 million has been approved for 1991-92.

Additionally since 1987 more than £200,000 has been made available to local education authorities under the LEATGS scheme to ensure that further education teachers are confident and competent in the use of information technology in their teaching.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will set out the calculations underlying increasing Alyn and Deeside district council's revenue support grant for 1991-92 by £13,000; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Alyn and Deeside's entitlement to revenue support grant is based on the formula ([S−N−(P×C)]) which is set out in section C of the Welsh Revenue Support Grant Distribution Report (No. 2) approved by the House on 29 January.

The relevant values attributable to Alyn and Deeside for 1991-92 under the formula are:

S (£000)	7,960
N (£000)	2,243
P×C (£000)	2,109
P	56,125
C	37·57

Revenue support grant is a component of overall aggregate external finance. Alyn and Deeside's aggregate external finance for 1991-92 is £5,851,619, an increase of 8·4 per cent. on 1990-91.

Farm and Countryside Service

Mr. Raffan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what arrangements he is making in Wales when the Farm and Countryside Service is established as a separate agency in April 1992.

Mr. David Hunt: I have, in consultation with my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture Fisheries and Food, considered carefully the future of the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service (ADAS). We looked at a number of proposals. Among the factors we took into account were the need for the new agency arrangements properly to reflect the respective responsibilities of my right hon. Friend and myself; the range and depth of the advisory services which could be offered; the interests of existing staff; and comparative costs. My principal concern was that the farming community in Wales should have access to the best possible advice in the years ahead. I have concluded that a joint England and Wales Agency having a distinctive Welsh management, with appropriate Welsh Office representation on its Ownership Board and responsible jointly to my right hon. Friend and me is the arrangement that would best meet the needs of the industry in Wales. Planning work is now therefore proceeding on that basis.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 185

SESSION 1990–91

4th February—15th February, 1991

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr. Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr. Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R=first reading, 2R=second reading, Money res=money resolution, Com=Committee stage, Rep=Report stage, 3R=third reading, amendt/amendts=amendment/amendments, *=matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
